PREFACE.

THE introductions to the documents contained in this book were probably the last contribution of Thorold Rogers to the cause of research for which he had done so much. On hearing that the Society had the Poll-tax rolls of 1380 and several subsidy rolls of later date copied out for publication, he suggested the addition of the Coroners' Inquests of Edward I's time and some other judicial matter, and offered to edit the whole; an offer of course gladly accepted. He has analysed the Poll-tax returns and shown the nature and extent of the population of the City, small at that time, yet much crowded within the old walls. The total number of those who were above the age of fifteen only amounted to 2035. Allowing for the children, and adding about 1500 for the members of the University, the total cannot have been much more than 5000. He also notes the character of the names—the female name is never Mary, perhaps from reverence. Nor is there more than one Ann, perhaps for the same reason. The return of the Hearth Tax in 1665 (the year of the Great Plague) shows that, including the University, there were 5134 hearths, i. e. about 3·6 hearths to each house; and we must conclude that there were about one and a-half times as many inhabitants as hearths, i. e. from 7000 to 7500. It is now about 50,000, but several large suburbs are included. The notices of the subsidies are fragments illustrating the financial relation of the City to the Crown. The Masters and Scholars and privileged persons were mostly exempt, or paid in other ways.

The Coroners' Inquests come from Twyne's vast collections (to which Wood owed more than he seems to acknowledge), but the Editor copied several himself from John de Osney's Roll in the Bodleian. Of the 29 Inquests (one being an abjuration of the realm by a horse-dealer before the Coroner), thirteen are murders committed by students. The offenders are largely Oxfordshire men, but not a few are Irish. The University perhaps had no criminal jurisdiction at that time; and whatever the High Steward now has in theory, has in practice expired, and the Vice-Chancellor's Court only tries civil cases—small debts and (sometimes) torts. Not only were the students armed, but it was not always safe to meet a city guild, such as that of the tailors, when they were holding their Midsummer Revels. The Coroner's office brought in some gain to the King in the way of fines and forfeitures. Then come documents which illustrate the relations between Town and Gown, especially those connected with the great fray on S. Scholastica's day, 10 Feb., 135$\frac{4}{5}$. The result was that the King largely extended the privileges of the University, and a new series of protests and feuds began. Last of all come miscellaneous documents, showing the old boundaries, the rental, and the tolls of the City: and details of the expense of building the tower of New College and that of Merton College. The very detailed index, involving much labour and care, is due to Mr. George Parker of the Bodleian.

It will be seen that we have here a sort of Directory and Ratebook and notes from the Tax Collector's books and notes of the wages of labour, and some judicial matter; they more or less illustrate the author's great History of Prices—a monumental work and indispensable for the history of Political Economy. It is to be lamented that Thorold Rogers did not live to put the finishing hand to it, but substantially the work of his life was done.

James Edwin Thorold Rogers, son of George Vining Rogers, Esq., was born at West Meon in Hampshire, March 23, 1823. I remember his laying some stress on the peculiarly strong character of the inhabitants of that river valley, descendants of the small tribe of Meonwaras in Saxon times, and who formed the medieval manor of Mienes mentioned in the Dialogus de Scaccario: he thought they had always led a somewhat secluded and isolated life. He was educated at King's College, London, and then at Magdalen Hall, Oxford, where he matriculated 9 March 1843, at the age of 19. He took a First Class in Literis Humanioribus in 1846, was B.A. the same year, and M.A. in 1849. Afterwards he became a member of Worcester College. He was M.P. for Southwark 1880–5, and for Bermondsey 1885–6, and probably the late hours of the House of Commons told on his health. From 1859 to 1890 he was Tooke Professor of Political Economy at King's College, London: in 1862 he became Professor of the same subject at Oxford, and in 1888 was again elected to that chair. He took advantage of the opportunity to popularise the results of his great book in lectures on 'The Economic Interpretation of History': he had already abridged it in his 'Six Centuries of Work and Wages,' 1885, and he summed up his conclusions as to taxation in an article on 'Finance' in the new edition of the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' Of his historical works we might speak more at length, if this were the place. He died on 12 October, 1890, in his own home in Oxford.

POLL TAX AND CIVIL POPULATION OF OXFORD, 1380–1.

THE following list of contributors to the poll tax of 1380–1 (4 Ric. II.) has been taken to illustrate the condition and indirectly, the population of Oxford. It is an exhaustive catalogue of all the persons liable to the tax, that is, all the civic residents in the town, for Academics are not charged to it, and probably not the matriculated traders, whom the University could admit and license. The list does not contain any trading stationer or bookseller. It seems too that College servants living within the walls of the foundation or of the Hall are not reckoned. Nor are the monks and friars, a very considerable population in Oxford. Nor are known beggars. The list is limited to lay persons, being over fifteen years of age. The grant may be found with its particulars in Rot. Parl. iii. 90. Parliament met on Nov. 5, 1380, at Northampton, in the Priory of S. Andrew.

The grant of this poll tax was said by writers of the time to have been a principal stimulant to Tyler's insurrection. I have long since pointed out that the causes of that remarkable and unexpected uprising were many, and were long in coming to maturity. But when people are startled by a sudden and formidable fact, they are exceedingly apt to assign it to trivial causes. The last cause which they are likely to ascribe it to is misgovernment or natural irritation. They are nearly as unlikely to assign it to the success of a social propaganda. But in our day it is possible to discover the principal agencies which were at work. They were mainly two: the dissatisfaction felt at the attempt to modify by force the rising market for labour, and the impulses which the teaching of Wiklif and his followers had given to the organisation of the upland folk on the lines of social discontent.

I mention this because, with all the deductions given above, I should have expected that the tax-paying inhabitants of Oxford would have exceeded the number 2005, which is recorded at the foot of the roll. Some time ago, I reckoned that if the tax was limited to persons of 15 years old and upwards, an addition of a third more would give the actual population. But longer consideration induces me to conclude that the fraction is too low, and that as many more would be nearer the mark. I am not, and cannot indeed be, dogmatic. If the former estimate be taken, the civic population was under 3000; if the latter, about 4000. It is however by no means impossible that the troubles of the year had drawn away part of the regular population. We know indeed that the insurrection extended over the whole East of England, and as Oxford was the home of Wiklif's movement, it is likely to have sent its contingent to the outbreak.

The tax was to yield twelve-pence for every individual in the population who was liable to it. But it was to be assessed on these conditions—the tax collectors were to levy the amount according to the individual's ability, with the limit that no person was to be charged for himself and wife more than 20*s.* or less than four-pence. In the Oxford distribution the highest assessment is 13*s.* 4*d.*, and the apportionment is so exact that a return is made of £100 5*s.* as the collection for the Crown.

During the time in which the tax was imposed, Wykeham was clearing that large space which must have been contained in the North-East ward of the town. If Wood's statement is accurate, this district had once been a populous part of Oxford, and had been severely visited by the plague. It is said to have been at the time of Wykeham's purchase a resort of bad characters. Until however the clearance was quite effected, there was probably some settled population on the site. At this time the area which Wykeham enclosed was larger than any which had been appropriated within the walls.

The city was divided into four wards—South-East, South-West, North-East, and North-West. The boundaries were no doubt the city walls, and the lines of High Street, Queen Street, Cornmarket Street, and S. Aldate's. Three town parishes existed then which have ceased to be. Two of them, S. Edward and South S. Michael, were absorbed into Wolsey's College, and the site of S. Mildred's was apparently partitioned between Exeter and Lincoln. The wards had each an alderman, two of whom apparently lived in the South-West ward, and a mayor, William Dagavill or Dagville, a family which long resided in the town.

The suburbs were S. Thomas, Stockwell Street and Twenty-acre, Walton, Dunseye, Osney servants, S. Mary Magdalen, S. Giles, Holy Cross, the servants of S. John's Hospital, and the monastic servants. Except S. Frideswide's, there was no considerable monastery within the walls. All the secular Colleges too were within the walls, except Balliol. All the Monastic Colleges and Monastic Seminaries but one, Canterbury College, were outside the walls. But the Colleges as yet were few. Merton was the only considerable foundation. Balliol, Exeter, Oriel, Queen's, had been founded, but were poorly endowed. University was as yet unincorporated. A new departure was being made with New College, called in some of these accounts Winchester College. The Halls were numerous. Some are mentioned, but only incidentally, because their servants were taxed. I have noted thirty-three.

Though the Academics are exempt, the Bedels of the University are assessed. That of Theology is John Boston, that of Civil Law John Dosiare, that of Arts Robert Butorwyk. Two sub-bedels are enumerated also—Roger Clifton of Theology, and Stephen Hambury of Civil Law. The superior bedels are all three married, the sub-bedels appear to be single men. Some persons appear to be without occupation, either academic or civic, and one is described as 'quondam stationarius.' It is not however quite clear whether these persons lived within or without the city walls, as they are not enumerated under any locality, as most of the people are.

A large majority of the persons assessed have surnames. I do not pretend to discuss the vexed question, whether these names were permanent. Some have only Christian names. Some—and this has caused me no little difficulty in drawing up the list of callings—appear to be named from their occupation only. As I have observed before in examining subsidy rolls, the female name is never Mary, probably from reverence. Nor have I noticed more than one Ann, perhaps for the same reason. But Mary was not unknown, as this was the name of Henry the Fourth's first wife; while one of the Mortimers was Anne, the wife of the Earl of Cambridge.

There are 49 tailors reckoned,—this being the commonest occupation,—29 brewers, 24 skinners, and 23 webbs or weavers, this being the old name of the calling. There are 18 butchers, 16 bakers, 16 carpenters, 15 souters (the old name it appears for cobblers, though there are 7 who go by the modern name), 13 fullers, 12 tapsters (all women, this termination always implying a female occupation), 12 cordwainers, 11 chandlers, 10 hostilers, and the same number of slaters. Nine are respectively alutarii (I suppose boot-makers) and fishmongers, 8 drapers. Seven persons pursue each of the following callings—glovers, masons, upholders, and dyers. Six are sheepsters, spicers, fishers, fletchers, and goldsmiths. Five are saddlers, lockyers, and corsors. Four are tilers, coopers, and ironmongers. There are three plying each of the following trades—latoners, fourbers, smiths, mercers, sheathers, hucksters, plumbers, parchemoners, cursors, and leeches. There are two in each of the following—tanners, tawyers, taverners, maltmen, bowyers, cutlers, chapmen, spurriers, lotrices (I suppose that there were other washerwomen), sutrices, millers, horners and harp-makers.

The following have only one practitioner—dauber, brasier, poulter, netmaker, scaler, hosier, vintner, kember, kempster, fourner, albitarius, spinner, toner, painter, mattrass-maker, harper, apothecary, grinder, textor, barber, capper, sawyer, chair-maker, cap-maker, filatrix, sutor, mango equorum, garlick-monger, patten-maker, grasier, and vegatarius. Some of these traders appear to employ a great many hands, and a few apprentices are noted. I have not enumerated the cooks and the manciples.

In order to indicate the distribution of the population, I have counted, from the document which follows, the population liable to taxation in each of the four wards, and that of the several suburbs given. I make the number to be 2035, i.e. 30 more than are stated to be liable at the foot of the roll. But this is no serious difficulty. The assessors had to reckon the sum of those who were liable.

The South-East ward, i.e. the district on the south side of High Street, from Carfax to the East gate, contained 344; the North-East, the most populous, 378; the South-West, S. Aldate's and S. Ebbe's 348; and the North-West 223: 1293 in all. Of the suburbs, the most populous is S. Mary Magdalene, with 157; S. Thomas has 88; S. Giles 59; and Holy Cross 15. The district of Stockwell Street and Twenty-acre, i.e. what is now Walton Street 24; Walton Manor 49; and Dunseye 44. Lastly come the monastic servants. Osney has 15, the hospital of S. John's 12, while the rest of the non-privileged monastic, collegiate and aularian dependents are 259. The suburbs then contain 742 taxable persons.

It is probable that the Colleges, Halls, and monastic institutions contained at least 1500 inmates. If this be fairly accurate, the whole population of Oxford, academic and civic, a little more than five centuries ago, was from about 5000 to 5500. It will be seen that in some cases the roll gives no rate. It is, I presume, defective.

The following is a summary of their proportion of a tenth paid by the laity of Oxford in the year 1394–5. The amount is given by the several parishes. The tenth was to be paid in two moieties. The interest of the document lies in the indirect evidence it gives as to the magnitude and comparative wealth of the several Oxford parishes. It will be seen that the largest contribution is from S. Martin's (Carfax) parish, though the area of this parish is small.

The date of the following document, other than that it is thought to be of Richard the Second's reign, is not given. It appears to be a return from the parish of S. Mary the Virgin only, and to contain those names which the sub-collector declared to have paid a poll-tax of 4*d.* each person, the subsequent distribution of the total liability being a further part of the process of assessment and collection. It will be observed that the document gives no intimation as to the position, occupation, or resources of the persons enumerated. The interest of the document is that it shows, that at the time of its compilation, that there were 295 lay persons living in the parish, who were over fourteen years of age, and were, prima facie, liable to the fourpenny tax.

In the following document, which is conjecturally assigned to Edward the Third's reign, but in which the same principal collectors are named as in the preceding instrument, an account is given of all persons above the age of 14 years in the parish of S. Peter in the East and Holy Cross (Holywell). It appears to me that the document is of the same date, and bears reference to the same impost as that which precedes it, and that both are of Edward's reign, and of the year 1377.

The following is the list of privileged persons, i.e. such persons as, residing in Oxford, were licensed by the authorities of the University to carry on certain callings, and were protected from disturbance in such callings by the authority of the University. Most of the ordinary occupations were necessarily enrolled in guilds, admission to which was through apprenticeship, and occasionally by journeyman work for a time. But from an early time, the University was empowered to license certain persons in certain callings, and the matriculated tradesman, as he was called, survived up to living memory.

It will be noticed, that, as in the poll tax of 1380, the superior and inferior bedels, though privileged persons, were not exempted from taxation as members of the University. It would seem therefore that the superior bedels were not, at least at this time, graduates.

Of the booksellers and stationers five are described as Dutchmen, two are women, and one appears to be a clerk in orders, and a graduate. I presume that such a person, engaged in a trade or calling, must have been held to have forfeited his academical or clerical privilege of exemption. One is described as also bell-ringer to the University.

There are nine barbers, who are all assessed, with one exception, on their goods. It is probable that such college servants as were found within the several corporate institutions, or within the unincorporated halls were not taxed, and that this list is of persons who lived in private houses. The spensers and manciples, i.e. those persons who were employed to cater for the Colleges and Halls were probably, in the same manner, exempt 'if they lived in College or Hall,' so there must have been more of such persons than the twelve enumerated in the schedule.

Four servants are said to be liable, who were dependents of New College, eight of Magdalene. Three are described as being servants of the Prior of S. Frideswide, six as similarly connected with Merton, Queen's, Corpus Christi, and Hinksey Hall, while the relations of two are not specified. Five are All Souls' servants.

The servants de Roba, fourteen in number, are, I conclude, persons engaged as makers of academical costume. But one of these people appears to have been an apothecary, and two women are plainly laundresses.

The most numerous class is that of cooks. They are 34 in number, and are attached to divers Colleges and Halls.—Queen's, Magdalene, University, Merton, Corpus, Canterbury, Lincoln, Bernard, Durham, Exeter, Brasenose, and New Colleges are specified. The following Halls are also named,—Magdalene, Trinity, Jesus, Greek, Hinksey, Broadgates, White, New Inn, Hart, and S. Mary, besides Peckwater Inn, and S. Frideswide's. The cooks of the heads of Colleges are also occasionally designated. But it will be seen that the cooks of Balliol, Oriel, and All Souls are not in the enumeration, nor those of the very numerous Halls which were still in existence. I conclude therefore, as before, that when this servant resided within the College, he was exempt.

The whole number of privileged persons is 111, and the sum paid by them is £10 15*s.* 3*d.*, or under two shillings a-piece. The largest contributions are those of the bedels and under-bedels, whose incomes, I believe, were chiefly derived from fees.

per manus Willelmi ffrere et Johannis Snowe xiij die ffebruarii.

By 14, 15 Henry VIII. cap. 16, Parliament with much reluctance, and only after great pressure, in consideration of the unsatisfactory relations existing between the King and Francis I. of France, granted Henry a yearly subsidy for four years. The tax was to be 1*s.* in the pound for the first two years on all lands held by natives, 2*s.* on those held by aliens, 6*d.* in the pound on the personal property of such subjects as had over 40*s.* in goods and less than £20, and 1*s.* on those whose property exceeded this sum. In the case of aliens the sums were to be 1*s.* and 2*s.* If natives had 40*s.* in goods and received wages of 20*s.* a year and upwards, they were to pay 4*d.*, if aliens 8*d.*, who were to pay 8*d.* if they were not liable to the higher taxation, and were not on yearly wages. In the third year the payment was limited to landowners of £50 a year and upwards, who were to pay 1*s.* in the pound, aliens 2*s.* The taxation of personalty in the last two years is to be levied on those only who are returned as possessing £50, when it is to be 1*s.* in the pound in the case of subjects, 2*s.* in that of aliens.

The Act contains the usual exemptions. The Universities and Colleges of Oxford and Cambridge are excused, with all persons actually engaged in study, the Schools and Colleges of Eton and Winchester, and certain monastic establishments. The servants of the Colleges, however, are rated in a different schedule which will be given hereafter. The assessment, it will be seen, is by parishes, not by wards and suburban divisions. The Mayor and Aldermen are appointed Commissioners for carrying out the Act, and are made responsible for its punctual payment at the Exchequer. In every parish, however, sub-collectors are appointed, generally two, who are to receive the payments on behalf of the city authorities.

The tax then is a graduated property tax, exacted from the more wealthy class only in the third and fourth years during which the subsidy lasted, and in the first place only demandable from those who had over 40*s.* in property, and had 20*s.* in yearly wages. Only a small class then of the community was rendered liable. In practice, as is known to every one who has studied these valuations for the sake of taxation, the estimate of household goods is always low. Money, household furniture and effects, and in the case of agriculturists, corn actually reaped and threshed, were liable. Growing crops were not, and it is probable that stock-in-trade was similarly exempt. Such a stock was not often, we may conclude, very large, but a capricious tax of five or ten per cent. on goods intended for sale must have seriously affected business. It is notable too, that the sums levied are generally round, marks or shillings or groats, and contain no fractions. The return therefore is of the propertied class in the city, and of their personal dependents. The two parishes of S. Edward and S. Mildred have disappeared, but that of S. Michael in the South remains. It is not easy to determine whether the Commissioners carried out precisely the provisions of the Act, though they taxed themselves pretty fully for the time. Henry's taxes, however, were generally very disappointing, and fell far short of those which his predecessors had collected. Some of those who have commented on this fact, have inferred that the old prosperity was declining, and that England at the commencement of the sixteenth century was poorer than it had been in the fifteenth. Some have set down the decay of the towns, of which many statutes make mention, to the superior attractions of country life. I am unable to find evidence for either inference, and I conclude that the taxpayer, who exhibited the most obstinate reluctance to making parliamentary grants, evaded the distasteful payment.

The contributors to the tax of 1524 are 422 in all. The largest number is from S. Martin, or Carfax. But the wealthiest for its population is S. Ebbe's, the smallest, next S. Aldate's, third All Saints, fourth S. Mary Magdalene, and fifth S. Martin. The poorest parish is S. Peter-le-Bailey, next to it S. Michael's in the North, and next S. Giles'. But out of the eleven contributors in S. Ebbe's, two are among the largest. One Alderman lives in S. Aldate's, a second in S. Ebbe's, a third in S. Mary Magdalene, a fourth with the Mayor in S. Martin's. The first three pay £3 6*s.* 8*d.*, the Mayor and the fourth £3. One person, Richard Hampden, residing in S. Mary Magdalene, is designated Esquire. He pays at the higher rate. But in All Saints John Seman is assessed at £4 10*s.* This person employs nine servants. In the same parish one Thomas Wayte is assessed at £4. The callings of the several contributories are rarely noted.

A few persons are designated as Dutchmen, and pay apparently the aliens' tax. Such are George Starck in S. Aldate's, and Gerard Smith with his servant Francis Cornelis in S. Peter's-in-the-East. I cannot guess to what branch of the Teutonic race these people belong. Twelve servants of the Abbot of Osney are assessed, generally at the lowest rate, in S. Thomas' parish. The use of surnames has now become almost universal. A few widows are assessed.

The parishes which then lay close to the city wall were of course small and cramped. Such were the two S. Michaels, and S. Peter-le-Bailey. S. Thomas had become to all appearance the most populous suburb, S. Mary Magdalene the most prosperous. At that time it included much which is now contained in Balliol College, up to the southern wall of what is now S. John's, and then Bernard College. Its eastern boundary was the King's highway, now the road leading to the Museum, and the only regular approach to Oxford from the north; for it appears that a ditch was dug across S. Giles', and that it passed a little below S. John's southern wall, and running along in an easterly direction was made to join the common ditch, between Balliol and Durham or Trinity. Beyond this ditch were the fortifications of the North Hundred, of which the walk opposite S. John's entrance is a relic. S. Giles' then was a poor and insulated district. Holywell had a few houses on the north side of the street, and near the eastern end, as one can see from Agas's map. Here stood the gallows, on which the lords of the manor, the Warden and Fellows of Merton, had and exercised the right of hanging offenders after trial.

It would seem that the whole assessable property of the civil population of Oxford, within the limits designated by the Act, was under £2000, provided a tax of five per cent. were strictly exacted. But by this time a subsidy had become a fixed quantity in which the old form of valuation was retained, in order to allow the Commissioners to distribute it, but from which the Exchequer expected to receive an invariable amount. I conclude therefore that the principal value of this schedule is the register which it gives of the better-off Oxford citizens in 1524.

HEARTH TAX OF 1665.

THE Hearth Tax, an impost borrowed from French finance, was introduced after the Restoration, in order to assist in creating a revenue for the King. It was a payment of two shillings a year payable in equal moities every six months on every fire-place in a house. It was repealed at the Revolution. It was not imposed on houses below a certain small annual value, 20*s*. a year. The date of this document is 1665.

The returns of the hearth money, or rather of the number of houses returned which are prima facie chargeable, (for the return was of all tenements and exemptions had to be pleaded,) are good evidence as to the population of a town or country from which the returns are made, and I have employed them for population estimates at the end of the seventeenth century, assuming that at this period the average number of inmates was four. In 1861, when overcrowding was far more customary than it was in early times, perhaps is even now, the average was 5·366 to each house.

The Colleges were rated and their liabilities head the list. I suppose that the number of hearths is some evidence as to the possible number of occupants, though probably two or three persons shared the same sitting-room. There is however certainly some mistake in the number returned from Magdalene College, for in 1684 this College paid on 76 chimneys, as will be seen in my notes to the History of Prices, vol. vi., p. 669. New College is called Winchester College in the return, and the number of chimneys is what the College actually paid for, till the new buildings were occupied, when it paid for 79.

The year 1665 was, as is well known, that of the great Plague of London. I have not found in the examination of the New College and Magdalene accounts that it excited any great alarm at Oxford, but it was very deadly at Winchester, and greatly interfered with residence at Cambridge. It would be likely however to have had some effect on the migratory population of the Colleges and Halls. The number of the hearths to which they are declared liable, 1501, does not correspond with the numbers set against each College and Hall, even if the Magdalene number is raised from 12 to 76. When the list is added up it comes to only 1329, even with this correction. I conclude therefore that the Colleges and Halls returned their liabilities on the number of hearths actually in use. In the city 24 houses are exempt on the ground that they are not inhabited.

In two of the Halls, Hart and Edmund, it appears that part of the aularian buildings were let off to non-academical tenants, one of them in Hart Hall being described as a mercer, the other as a gentleman.

Including the full academical assessment, the number of hearths in the city, the suburbs and Binsey being added, is 5134. The enumeration is given by wards and parishes, three wards only being distinguished, and one of the parishes, S. Martin, being reckoned in each of the wards.

It seems to me highly probable that many of the larger tenements were lodging-houses for graduates and undergraduates. There are 72 houses in the city containing eight or more hearths. Thus, one contains twenty, one seventeen, five sixteen, one fifteen, one fourteen, five thirteen. Some of them may have been inns.

The Mayor and Aldermen of the city are rated on three hearths. These should be of the city buildings, those parts, I presume, which still stand on the North side of the courtyard. The Town Hall, built by Rowney, probably a descendant of a person who is named in the list, is of later date. The city holding is in St. Martin's.

Seven persons only are described as gentlemen. These I conclude were attorneys at law. Three are esquires. There is one knight, Sir Sampson White, who probably received that distinction at the coronation, in which ceremony, I believe, the Mayor of Oxford takes a part of right. Sir Sampson White kept a shop in Oxford, for I have often noted purchases made from him in the College accounts.

In full term I should conclude that the city and University had about one and-a-half times as many inhabitants as there were hearths. It must be remembered that students at the University, if they came from any considerable distance did not leave Oxford in the short vacations, and if their home was very remote, resided even during the long vacation. Three-quarters of a century after the date of this document, Adam Smith resided during the whole period that his exhibition lasted in Oxford.

The list of householders gives very little information as to the callings of those who are assessed to the hearth tax. One person is described as a mercer, one as a shoe-maker, and two as doctors, though it is not clear that this means medical practitioners. The total number of householders, a few being joint tenants, is 998, and the number of hearths to the city population is 3653, or 3·6573 hearths to a house. In 1690, the average number of hearths to a house all over England was 1·9432, and the number in Oxford in 1665 is higher than that in Middlesex at the later date, where it is 3·2780. I cannot account for this remarkable proportion, except by the reason mentioned above, that many of the houses were destined for academical lodgers. Over all England there were no doubt twice as many inhabitants as there were hearths, but I should infer that in full term the whole population of Oxford, Academic and Civic, in 1665 was from 7000 to 7500.

CALENDAR OF DOCUMENTS.

The foregoing pages are transcripts in extenso of documents relating to Oxford Town or City, and University. The following are a register of such documents in the Public Record Office as bear on the city, and are intended to assist such persons as may be desirous of gleaning particulars as to the City of Oxford. Of course these Records had only an ephemeral interest, and are only fragments of what, had all been preserved, would have been a complete financial history of the City as far as its relations to the Crown went, and the grants to the Crown by Parliament. The first part is of the contributions made by lay persons, or at least from lay fees, but contain a number of petitions for exemption addressed to the Crown by the Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars. These privileged persons did however in fact make contributions to the Exchequer, but were not assessed by the ordinary civic authorities. The collection has been made by Miss Walford.

It is quite certain that Parliaments sat, the proceedings of which have perished, not being preserved in the Rolls or in the Act of the year. This is made clear by the fact, that notices of the payment of tenths, fifteenths, and other parliamentary grants, are inserted in private accounts, though there is no other record of them. If an exhaustive account of taxes levied in various towns and counties were made, the charges to which the people were put for Parliamentary grants could be as exhaustively stated. Perhaps when Parliament merely made a grant, but presented no petitions of consequence, and later on passed no laws, it was not thought important to preserve the record.

The clerical subsidies follow on those from the laity. They are preserved it appears from the reigns of Philip and Mary only.

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE.

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE.

THE following inquests and inquisitions are intended to serve as an illustration of the judicial procedure in what may be called courts of the first instance, at or about six centuries ago. Most of the inquests and all the inquisitions are extracted from Twyne's Collections, an immense repertory of Oxford antiquities, and to all appearance the principal source of Anthony Wood's notes. Twyne copied from the Records in the Tower, and the City Archives. Not a few of the documents which he handled in the National Collection have perished or become illegible, and many of the documents which were, near three centuries ago, in the possession of the city, have inevitably disappeared. The inquests from the 9th to the 17th inclusive were copied by the Editor more than twenty years ago from a portion of the coroner's (John de Osney's) roll, which is still preserved in the Bodleian Library. Another portion of the roll was in the city Archives, and was copied by Twyne. It contained the first eight inquests. A third portion of the original roll is said to be preserved in the Archives of Bridgewater. The process by which documents and archives have been lost or scattered, is no doubt due to the practice of attorneys, who having been allowed to hold a lien over deeds till their accounts are settled, have kept them long after their charges have been met, and in due course disposed of them to toy-dealers and others. The privilege enjoyed by these practitioners is wholly superfluous, entirely exceptional, and constantly mischievous, and should be abrogated. It has led to the loss of thousands of valuable documents.

These documents are intended to serve only as an illustration of the state of Oxford society in early times. It cannot be disputed that they present a picture of violence and insubordination on the part of the University students at a time when Oxford was crowded with them, and they came from all parts of Europe. A century after the date of most of these documents Alexander V, 1409–1410 (Peter Philargi), graduated at Oxford as a Bachelor of Divinity, proceeding to his doctorate at Paris, and, being finally elected to the papacy, was poisoned by John XXII, his successor, as Gascoigne alleges. The same person is the authority for the statement that there were 30,000 (triginta millia) students at Oxford before the plague, Gascoigne asserting that he counted them from the Chancellor's rolls*. The number seems incredible. The town had no more than about 4000 inhabitants; and though our forefathers packed themselves together very closely, it is not easy to see how the strangers could have been housed and fed. Of the twenty-nine inquests (one being an abjuration of the realm by a horse stealer before the coroner) thirteen are murders committed by students.

When a dead body was found, it was the duty of the person who discovered it to raise a hue and cry, and the neighbours were bound to pursue the culprit. The parishioners, as we shall see further on, were liable to a fine if they neglected this duty by daylight. Information was conveyed to the coroner, who forthwith summoned a jury. This jury was generally of twenty persons, the persons summoned from the parish in which the body was found being put the first, and others from three other parishes being summoned also. The jurors declare the facts on oath, though it appears plain that evidence of those who were not on the jury was taken. The finder of the body was under some responsibility, for persons pledge themselves to produce him or her, in case further proceedings are to be taken. The chattels of the offender or offenders, and the value of the deodand, are escheats of the Crown, and the town bailiffs are made responsible for their value. But the University had certain rights of escheat, as had also the hospital of S. John, the Prior of S. Frideswide during the fair, and the rector of S. Peter's in the East, who was also lord of the manor of Holywell, and apparently principal proprietor in that parish and in Wolvercote. The reversion of this benefice and lordship was granted to the Warden and Scholars of Merton by Henry III in 1266, when the society was still settled at Maldon in Surrey.

We shall see that certain responsibilities were attached to the office of the coroner and to the jury, when we deal with the inquisition of the justices in eyre. By a very wholesome rule, negligence, incapacity, or dishonesty on the part of a judge involved personal liabilities, for which, if they were proved, the offender was certainly amerced. Hence it was important to preserve the record of inquests, at least as long as any liability was over the head of this official, or even his executors, possibly his heirs. We may be certain then that the rolls of the coroners were regularly engrossed. It is plain from the Inquisition of the justices in eyre that there was more than one coroner. The first seventeen in this collection are those of John de Osney. But Thomas Lysewys is associated with Osney in the third, and William de Fencote Doghe in the eighth. In 1306 Thomas Lisewys acts as coroner, in 1307 John Wyth. In 1314 Thomas de Grampound and Reginald Ive act as coroners, and seem to have been in office up to Midsummer 1322, when the latest is found. It appears that one of Osney's colleagues was Adam de Spalding (p. 174).

Perhaps the twenty-fifth of the inquests should have been put with the inquisitions, for it resembles in character the first of these documents. The reason for retaining it in its present place, is that, according to Twyne, it comes from Grampound's roll.

The office of the coroner seems to have been derived from the principle laid down, we are told, soon after the Norman Conquest, that the locality was prima facie liable for homicides and deaths by accident or suicide. Of the inquests contained in this collection four are returned as accidental, one as a suicide. The coroner had to get an appraisement of the offender's or suicide's goods, and to register the same. He had also other duties, as that of securing treasure trove to the Crown, a function revived about a quarter of a century since, in reference to some golden ornaments found in one of the southern counties, which the Treasury sought to recover for the British Museum. It seems too from what follows, that the early coroners had not only the power of holding a court of enquiry and of committal, but of investigating capital charges. Edwardus de Hales in the first of the inquisitions is indicted before the coroner, Adam de Spalding, for the murder of Fulk Neyrmit.

The perpetual riot and insubordination of these students, scholars, or clerks must have been exceedingly irritating to the townspeople, and explain, if they do not excuse, the occasions in which the burgesses executed lynch law on the gownsmen. It does not seem that at this time the University authorities had any criminal jurisdiction over the students, as they had after Gascoigne had procured from Henry VI that the Chancellor or his deputy should always be ex officio a justice of the peace. The plea of clergy, and the subsequent handing of the offender over to his ordinary, must have suggested that outrages could be committed almost with impunity when the offender was a clerk. In the many manor accounts which I have read, I have never come across such acts of violence as are recorded here, as, for example, the faction fight in Grope Lane, the occasion of inquests twenty-one and twenty-two. The story of Gilbert de Foxlee and the tailors, for so I interpret 'cissores,' when the latter were holding their midsummer revels (eighteenth inquest), is another case.

The Inquisitions, a few of which are printed at the end of the Inquests, are illustrations of the process by which the city authorities took cognizance of offences. Enquiries were held by the coroner, bailiffs, and constables, assisted by a jury, into the culprits who have broken the peace, contrary to the statute of Winchester (13 Edw. I), the jury, as usual, giving the evidence on oath. From the second of these inquisitions we find that it was the custom to appoint certain watchmen at Carfax to see that persons did not parade the streets in arms after night fall. In this case the watch sought to conduct the offender to his lodging, and for that purpose held him in custody till he was rescued by certain clerks, his companions.

The third inquisition deals with the complaint of one Edith de Denyses, who alleges that her house was broken into, her forcer (chest) broken, and her goods carried off. The jury however evidently did not believe Edith's story, and will not vouch for her reputation and that of her companions. The fourth is a disturbance between some of the Abbot of Osney's men and certain clerks, when the former had been drinking. The fifth is an enquiry into the assessment of S. Peter's in the East and its chapelries to a wool tax held before the abbot of Eynsham and his associates, who assessed the tax and sold the proceeds of it. Here it seems that the parish had neither lands nor fleeces (the Merton Fellows kept no flock at Holywell and its appurtenances), and it was not clear that Wolvercot was within the liberties of the city.

In the sixth and seventh Inquisitions certain of the authorities (in the first case one of the aldermen, the bailiffs, and a jury; in the other the mayor, bailiffs, two of the aldermen, and a jury) present a variety of offenders, very much as a grand jury does in modern times. These are of early years in Henry VI's reign. The offenders are generally scholars, or college servants, and therefore privileged persons. The seventh Inquisition is called a view of frank-pledge. The last is again an enquiry into an outrage perpetrated on the king's watchmen by certain clerks. One of the watchmen it seems was killed. The offenders are Oxfordshire and Oxford born. A very large number of the earlier culprits are Irishmen.

Pleas of the Crown, before the Justices in Eyre, Jan. 14, 1285 (Twyne, MS. IV, p. 617 sqq.).

The following record is a copy of Bryan Twyne's transcript from the Public Records, and gives an account of those Pleas of the Crown, which came under the cognisance of the five Justices in Eyre, who were sent for the purpose of hearing such pleas to Oxford in the early part of the year 1285. The transcript was well known to Anthony Wood, and is frequently referred to in his collections. It is a characteristic illustration of the ancient process by which the rights of the Crown were enquired into and certified by a body of officials, and certain private rights enquired into and recognised. The action of the Eyre, long ago superseded, is somewhat similar to that which is now exercised by a grand jury. As the document is of considerable interest, it may be well to comment on it at some length.

The Justices in Eyre were, it is said, first instituted at the Council of Northampton, held on Jan. 26, 1176 (22 Henry II). We are told that they were sent by commission of the Crown, every seven years, through the whole country, with general instructions, and that the object was the 'ease of the people,' who were thus relieved from the necessity of attending the King's Bench. It is however quite clear from the document which follows, that the institution had for its principal object, the determination and registration of certain minor sources of the royal revenue, such as the chattels of convicted offenders, deodands, and fines levied on officials and parishes (misericordiæ) who had failed to satisfy some obvious and recognised duty. There are no less than one hundred and eleven cases brought before the justices, for the twelfth is given twice over.

The justices inspected the Coroners' rolls, in order to see whether any rights accrued to the Crown from inquests, which had been held and recorded. It appears that the Coroners were bound to attend the Eyre, as well as the Mayor, bailiffs, and twelve jurors. Beyond what came before the justices as official records, it appears that they listened to informations as to claims of privilege, trespasses, obstructions, and illegal fisheries, and that they took cognisance of wrongs done to persons who complained of such injuries, the last case recording the remedy accorded for an illegal and excessive distress.

It appears that when murders were committed during the day, the parish in which the crime was perpetrated was liable to fine, if the inhabitants did not at once raise hue and cry, and do their best to capture the offenders, and that they were liable to similar penalties if they failed to make an appearance in the Coroner's court, even though some of them served on the jury. But the rights of the Coroners in the manor of Holywell, then part of the rectory of S. Peter's in the East, and held by Bogo de Clare, were in dispute, as they were centuries afterwards, when the benefice and manor came, in reversion after the incumbency of de Clare, into the possession of Merton College, by a gift made to the College in 1266, before its settlement in Oxford. It will be seen too that liabilities incurred by an official, for negligence or breach of duty, were claimable from his heirs or his executors. It is possible that the very large rights involved in the parsonage of S. Peter's in the East determined the removal of Merton College from Maldon to Oxford.

The forty-first case is one of interest. An officer in the King's service (serviens Regis) informs the justices that Nicholas de Wantham, the parson of Banbury, has been discovered to be an associate of Guy and Emeric de Montfort, and with Llewellyn of Wales, the King's enemies, and that he collected information at Court, and communicated it to them by letter. On this he is summoned on three successive days, and failing to make his appearance and justify himself is outlawed. Evidence is then given that the parsonage of Banbury is worth a hundred marks yearly, and orders are given to the Bishop of Lincoln to sequestrate the benefice, in order that neither the incumbent nor his agent may be able to derive any of its profits.

Three of the Oxford churches are said to be in the King's patronage; that of S. Peter's in the East, with its chapelries of Holywell and Wolvercot, that of S. Mary the Virgin, and that of S. Bodoc. The first was worth £40 a year, the second 30 marks. The first was held by Bogo de Clare, the second by Robert de Flecham. The third, which has long disappeared, had been granted by the late King to the Penitential Friars, who supply evidence to the fact, by exhibiting the King's Charter.

Divers pourprestures are then presented. This offence consists in enclosing or encroaching on a public highway, either by land or water, or by obstructing water-courses and so doing injury to the vicinage. Such offences are alleged against the Preaching Friars, who had constructed a bridge on a southern branch of the river; against the late prior of S. Frideswide, who had pulled down some quarnels, i.e. half towers, such as one sees at New College, of the city wall; against the Master of S. John's Hospital, for appropriating an eyot in the Cherwell, probably that near its confluence with the Thames; against the Warden and Scholars of Merton College, for encroaching on the approaches to the Town Wall; against the Abbess of Godstow, for appropriating forty acres of pasture (no doubt in Walton manor); against the Abbot of Rewley, for building a chamber over the river, which impeded the navigation of the Thames near Hythe Bridge; and against the Preceptor of the Templars' house at Cowley for constructing a weir on the Thames, perhaps at Iffley. Except in the case of the Abbot of Rewley and Prior of S. Frideswide, the reputed offenders show grounds for their action. The building on the river is ordered to be demolished at the Abbot's cost, and the City Wall to be repaired at the Prior's cost.

No less than nine vintners are amerced, for selling wine in violation of the assize. The quantity sold is 871 tuns, a quantity which seems to give some colour to the statement as to the prodigious number of students resident at this time in Oxford, for if the dolium is taken to be the tun of wine, as it ordinarily is, and probably would be in a legal document, these irregular trade transactions are of 219,492 gallons.

Next the justices deal with those who have broken the assize of cloth, i.e. have not supplied it at the legal length, breadth, and weight of the piece. The cloth dealers are fined, and the jury, for concealing the fact, are to be fined as well. At many periods of English legal history, the government or the legislature from early times strove to secure the manufacture of English cloth, and to discourage the use of foreign products. Part of the process consisted in providing against fraudulent weaving and dressing. Ultimately the product was generally tested at Blackwell hall, near the old Guildhall in London, under the superintendence of the Clothworkers' Company. Provision was taken that a similar test was supplied at Norwich, Colchester, Leeds, and other centres of the trade. Early regulations about the cloth manufacture are to be found plentifully in the Rolls of Parliament.

The justices next proceed to deal with escheats of the Crown. Three of these appear to have been forfeitures of Jews, and in two cases the Jews had been hanged. In these cases the escheat had become the property of private persons by grant of the Crown, but it is noteworthy that the existing tenants, as on other occasions, had to exhibit the grant, and plead their title.

The sixty-first case is significant. One Henry of Yarmouth had been arrested and lodged in Oxford gaol. He had hidden eleven pounds of silver behind the grange of Bogo de Clare, the rector of S. Peter's, and lord of the manor of Holywell, this Bogo claiming and enjoying, as we shall see, very extensive and remarkable rights in the manor. The prisoner confessed to the Mayor and Coroner that he had hidden the money, the Mayor for the time being being one of the vintners who had broken the assize of wine, and sold irregularly an enormous quantity. Now the criminal had stolen the money from the Mayor, who had been instructed by the King's butler to pay the sum to a certain merchant, the transaction having been evidently on the King's account. The hidden sum might be considered as treasure-trove. But on the representation of the butler, the King issues a charter to the vintner, to be exhibited to the Justices in Eyre, in which the justices are bidden to hold the vintner quit of all liability. The charter is issued at Bath, only eleven days before the judges opened their commission at Oxford. It seems that the vintner ran some risk of losing the money either by the claim of the Crown, or of Bogo de Clare, and therefore took steps to secure his indemnity. The Mayor and Coroner recovered the money from the place where the culprit had buried it.

The next head is a long list of persons who had used unlawful expedients for fishing. The offending means are Kiddells and Starkells. The first of these is denounced in the Great Charter, and was clearly a kind of faggot*. The second term is unknown to me. But in Statute 13 Ric. II, cap. 19, certain kinds of illegal fishing-nets under the name of Stalkers are mentioned. Thirty-seven offenders are named, and among them the two Abbots and the Preceptor of Cowley. They are all to be fined.

The next is a list of persons who had been indicted but had got away. The offences are homicide, robbery, burglary, and the clipping of coin. One Godale, a homicide, had chattels, valued at ten shillings, for which, as usual, the Sheriff is to be responsible. But the bailiff of Bogo de Clare had appropriated these chattels, no doubt pleading the privileges of his lord. The clippers are Jews, and an enquiry is to be made from the Jews, as to what chattels they possessed. Then follows a list of persons, one of whom is the Queen's cook, who made default on the first day of the Eyre. The Abbess of Godstow is reported as having raised a water-mill on the King's domain, in the suburbs.

The jury next present that the town of Oxford was part of the King's ancient demesne, and that it was granted by King Henry the Elder (? Henry I) to the Burgesses, on the payment of a fee-farm of £63 0*s.* 5*d.*, of which £40 is paid into the Exchequer, and £23 0*s.* 5*d.* to the brethren (lepers) of S. Bartholomew. The charity was confirmed by Henry III, who says that it was made by his progenitors; £19 15*s.* 5*d.* to go for the lepers' maintenance, £3 5*s.* for their clothing. The town claims certain privileges and generally the customs of London, and among others, namium vetitum, that is a right of compensation for the seizure of cattle on the ground of trespass or damage.

Next comes the fair held by the Prior of S. Frideswide, for eight days from the feast of S. Frideswide, Oct. 18 inclusive. The jury say that they do not know by what warrant it is held. The Prior appears by his attorney and claims that they have held it before the time of legal memory, but put forward a charter of King John, in which neither the day on which the fair is to be held or its duration are specified. The case is to be tried.

The jury next present the fact, that two bailiffs of Bogo de Clare had erected a gallows in the lordship of Holywell within the last ten years, and had hanged two criminals, a man and a woman thereon, the man it seems for horsestealing *, the offence of the woman not being stated. When the manor came into the hands of Merton College, the same right of executing offenders, probably those who were caught red-hand in theft, was claimed and exercised †. Bogo de Clare is summoned to the court with his bailiffs. He claims that the parsons of Holywell had possessed these liberties time out of mind, and prays enquiry. A jury is impanelled with certain knights elected for this purpose, who allege on oath that the liberties claimed have always belonged to the parson.

The Chancellor of the University now appears and puts in a charter of 52 Henry III, containing an inspeximus of another charter issued twenty years before, and on the following day a second charter, to be followed by two more charters of the reigning king. Among other details, the first charter fixes the rate of interest to be paid to the Jews for loans, viz. 2*d.* per week per pound sterling, or 42½ per cent. per annum. The Mayor and Bailiffs of Oxford are to make oath, that they will preserve the liberties of the University, and the local police of the Assize of Bread and Beer is to be carried out by the Burgesses *, notice being given to the Chancellor or Proctors the day before, or, on failure of notice, the Assize to be void. At this time then the administration of justice, in the case of wrongs done by parties, is in the hands of the town authorities, viz. the Mayor, the four Aldermen, and eight Burgesses. The points in dispute between the Town and the University are to be decided in Easter Term at Westminster.

The only other complaint presented during the sitting of the Justices at this Session within the walls, is to the effect that when Salmon are on sale in Oxford—the Thames was then throughout its length a Salmon river—the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses appropriate at their pleasure a quarter of each fish. On enquiry the Town officials have nothing better to say than that they have always done what is complained of. The Justices in Eyre thereupon determine that such an appropriation is injurious and hurtful to the University, and that the practice must be altogether abandoned.

Having dealt with the intramural cases, the Justices proceed to the cases which arise in the suburbs, and employ a jury from the North Hundred or from the district outside the North Gate. Here we have a new set of Coroners. Two have died since the last Eyre, but there are four who are still in office. It would seem that the Itinerant Justices did not change their own place of session, which was probably the Castle.

The first case is one of robbery. Two persons had been arrested on suspicion of robbery, and lodged in a gaol at Headington, under the custody of the bailiff of Bullingdon, in which hundred, by the way, the north suburb of Oxford was. Presumably one of the culprits was a clerk, for he is rescued from prison by a number of clerks. It seems that the bailiff of Bullingdon permitted the escape of the other. But a considerable sum is found on them, which the rescued man is said to have taken, and this is in the hands of one Hugh de Plessets *, from whom the Sheriff is to recover the money.

Then certain homicides are noticed. In one case the culprit was brought from Chipping Norton on the charge of parricide. When he and those who had him in custody came near S. Mary Magdalene Church, he contrived to escape, no doubt to the church, acknowledged his offence, and abjured the realm. The town of Chipping Norton is to be prosecuted. Another offender was on his way to the gallows, when certain clerks rescued him, and put him for sanctuary into S. Giles' Church. In this case, as before, the names of the clerks are not known. In a fourth case a murder is committed, and the offender escapes. The person who finds the body makes his appearance, and gets hanged by the judges of gaol delivery, why, the document does not say.

In the next case two persons had been lodged in the Castle prison, had escaped from the custody of the gaoler, and had taken sanctuary in S. Mary Magdalene Church, with the usual consequences. The Sheriff who had allowed the escape had died before any judgment had been given as to his negligence. The question, it appears, was referred to the King's Council in Parliament, which decided that action should be taken against the deceased Sheriff's executors. The Rolls of Parliament between 6 Edward I and 18 Edward I are lost, or perhaps one would find some trace of the reference. There are six other homicides and robberies, and another rescue of a criminal from the gallows by clerks, one of which clerks, known by name, absconds. In one case, a former Vicar of S. Giles appropriated the lay chattels of a clerk, who was convicted and handed over to his bishop. For this he is to be fined and made to restore the chattels. A murder by a Jew follows, the offender being captured, and first sent to gaol to Ledes Castle in Kent, and then a remand to Oxford prison. We shall soon see more of him. Three escheats of plots in the suburbs are recorded, and divers pourprestures, one being the obstruction of a water-course, another the building of a cook-shop on the King's highway, near the graveyard of S. Mary Magdalene. In three cases of trespass, if no injury is done to the public, the trespass is condoned, on the payment of a regular rent to the Crown. This license is technically called arrentatio, and occurs frequently in the record.

One Henry, son of Milo, takes money from jurors, for giving them notice of their assize and (apparently) their liability to serve. He is to be fined.

Under the head of 'subtractions,' i.e. neglect to perform services due to a superior lord, and pay rents, the Chancellor of the University is summoned for a house in Horsemanger Street, i.e. the north side of Broad Street. The Chancellor, Mr. William Pickerel, appears with the Proctors, and alleges as the Jury also testify, that the University is seised of the house and rents. The right is to be tried. A tenement also which belonged to one John de Oo, and was now in the occupation of the Master and Scholars of Balliol, used to pay the Crown 1*s.* 11*d.* yearly. The Master, however, has not paid, and the court orders that he pay and be fined. The hundred, by which it seems the North Hundred is meant, is returned as worth annually to the King £30, £10 of which has been granted to the family of Bysot or Bissot. The importance of the district comprised under this name, consisted in the fact that the north approach was the most vulnerable part of medieval Oxford.

The ninety-seventh case is an appeal of blood, viz. the murder of one William de Prene by Isaac de Pulet or Polet, a Jew. The murder was committed on April 22, 1284. The plaint further alleges that Rebecca, the wife of Isaac, was an accomplice. The appellants are the brother, John, and the father, Simon, of the murdered man. By this time, however, one of the Justices in Eyre, Pychford, had left the court, and the Jew is sent to prison till Feb. 18. But by this time Roger Loveday was the only Justice left, and the criminal is remitted to prison till further steps can be taken in the matter. From these dates it is clear that the Eyre occupied more than a month in sitting.

By the ninety-ninth entry, it appears that one Bekkel, an approver, or as we should now say, a King's evidence, charged an accomplice Barton, a clerk, with robbery, and was yet hanged, I presume for some other crime. The clerk was put on his trial before the justices of gaol delivery, was convicted and also hanged, I presume because a former conviction, in which he had claimed his clergy, had been proved against him. His chattels, 103*s*., had been received by the late Chancellor of the University, Mr. Roger de Rowell. It would seem, therefore, that under certain circumstances the University received the forfeiture of a felon's chattels. The next two items are of indicted criminals who have fled from justice, and of a man who was charged with stealing corn, and with other thefts, but was tried and acquitted. The list ends for the present with the names of the Coroners, Mayor, who is on the Jury, and the principal bailiffs, who are also on it. Then follow the names of eight Jurors and four 'Electors.' These appear to be supplementary jurors, or possibly persons who selected other jurors for special cases. Similarly there are one official of the North Gate and twelve jurymen.

The rest of the cases are civil suits, or pleas which arise from civil suits. Two of them are cases in which the prosecutor of a civil suit, who was bound over, himself and two sureties, to prosecute, abandoned proceedings. For this a fine was inflicted on all three.

In the first case it appears that a man had married a widow and claims a messuage with its appurtenances in the suburbs, in right of his wife, from a person who he says had disseised unlawfully the mother of the wife. The defendant replies that she conveyed it while she was a widow, and that the woman had acknowledged the defendant's title. The plaintiffs reply that the conveyance was made while the woman was in prison and under duress. This is flatly denied by the defendant. The Court decides against the plaintiff and his wife. The defendant holds the property, and the plaintiffs are fined.

The next is another civil suit. The case turns upon the question as to whether a conveyance was made by a young woman at an age at which she could make a valid conveyance. It was asserted by the defendants that she was of full age, according to the use and custom of Oxford, viz. fifteen years old. The Jury affirm the facts as the defendants state them. The plaintiff is nonsuited, and rendered liable to a fine, but the Justices remit the liability.

Next follows the recognition of a debt of twelve marks, which the debtor stipulates that he will pay at next Michaelmas day. Three sureties come forward and acknowledge that if the principal makes default, they will become 'principal debtors,' and that the Sheriff is entitled to issue a fieri facias on their land and chattels. This is I think a trade loan, like the Statute Merchant security of the coming Parliament. Then comes an acknowledgment of half a mark for a license of concord about a plea of land, i. e. for levying a fine.

In another action it appears that Mr. Peter de Abyndon * (the first Warden of Merton College) had made a grant to a person who by this grant had unjustly disseised the lawful owner. The defendant comes into court, and cannot deny that it was a disseisin. The plaintiff recovers and the defendant is to be fined. He had, I presume, his remedy of Warranty against the Warden.

The last case is one of illegal and excessive distress, accompanied by an assault on the wife of the Plaintiff. Walter Feteplace, a member of a family which was of great importance and position in medieval Oxford, had let a house to one Richard of Canterbury and Amice his wife, at a rental of nine marks a year (£6). It seems from the details that the tenant was a Vintner. The plaint is that Feteplace entered the house, assaulted the woman, beat her and ill-used her, and carried off goods and chattels to the value of fifty-five marks. They give particulars of their loss ;—wine worth £16 12*s.*, and wine vinegar (as I read the text) up to 53*s.* 4*d.*; hay worth £7 6*s.* 8*d.*; wood worth 100*s.*; an iron-bound barrel worth 6*s.*; a felted cloth ; a coverlet ; and other goods and utensils worth £4 13*s.* 4*d.*† They allege, therefore, that they are damnified to the extent of a hundred marks, and make suit.

The defendant alleges that the plaintiffs held the house of him at nine marks a year, that they were in arrear with their rent a full year, that they had, in order to avoid distraint, removed their goods and chattels from the house, and that when he heard what they were doing he came to the house, and levied a distress upon them to the extent of a single tun of wine for arrears, that he did nothing further in the way of insult or injury, and he puts himself on his country.

The Jury 'elected by the consent of the parties' declare on oath, that the rent of the house was as alleged, nine marks, that the plaintiffs were in arrear, and that the defendant came to the house, on the day and year aforesaid (which are not given) and claimed his full rent, under threat of ejecting them and their goods and chattels at once. And as the plaintiff did not at once pay, the defendant took the wife and her boys by the shoulders and turned them out, that he beat the woman and ill-used her, and carried off goods to the value of £10. When they were asked about the debt of nine marks, they said that they were only three marks in arrear. The Court therefore decided that the plaintiffs should recover the £10, and fixed the damages to be paid them at £10 more.

* In the Rolls of Parliament, i. 63 b, he is called Peter de Lakyng.
† The schedule amounts to £36 11*s.* 4*d.*, 55 marks amount to £36 13*s.* 4*d.*

Henricus dei gratia Rex Angliæ Dominus Hiberniæ et Dux Aquitaniæ, omnibus Balliuis et fidelibus suis ad quos præsentes literæ peruenerint salutem. Inspeximus literas patentes dudum confectas apud Wodestoke in præsentia procuratorum scholarium Vniuersitatis Oxoniæ et Burgensium eiusdem villæ super quibusdam libertatibus præfatis scholaribus concessis in hæc verba. Anno regni Regis Henrici filij Regis Johannis 32°. 29° die Maij præsentibus apud Wodestoke tam procuratoribus scholarium Vniuersitatis, quam Burgensibus Oxoniæ, idem Dominus Rex concessit eisdem scholaribus libertates subscriptas:—videlicet, quod si inferatur iniuria prædictis scholaribus fiat inde Inquisitio tam per villatas vicinas quam per Burgenses prædictos: et, quod si ipsi Burgensis interficiant aliquem de scholaribus Oxoñ, vel in aliquem ipsorum insultum faciant, vel alicui ipsorum grauem iniuriam inferent, communitas eiusdem villæ per se puniatur et amercietur et Balliui per se et non cum communitate eadem punientur et amercientur, si negligentes fuerint, vel dolum fecerint in exequendo officium contra illos qui huiusmodi iniurias prædictis scholaribus inferunt. Et quod Judæi Oxoniæ non recipiant à prædictis scholaribus pro libra in septimana nisi duos denarios, et similiter fiat in minori summa secundum suam quantitatem, alioqui prædicti Judæi puniantur secundum constitutionem regni. Et quod quotiescunque et quandocunque Maior et Balliui Oxoñ sacramentum suæ fidelitatis præstabunt in loco suo communi, communitas eiusdem villæ denuntiet Cancellario, ut per se vel per aliquas personas electas præstationi iuramenti prædicti si voluerint, intersint; quod quidem iuramentum tale erit quoad scholares prædictos, videlicet, quod ipsi Maior et Balliui conseruabunt libertates et consuetudines Vniuersitatis prædictæ, alioquin, non valeat iuramentum ipsorum, sed iterum præstetur secundum formam præscriptam. Si vero Cancellarius nec per se, nec per procuratorem interesse voluerit, ad iuramentum nihilominus procedatur. Et quod duo Aldermanni sint electi et deputati de illis qui pro tempore fecerint, secundum quod ordinati erant a Domino Willelmo de Eboraco ad exhibendum iustitiam cum Præpositi abfuerint, sub eadem pœna qua præpositi tenentur, si negligentes vel malitiosi inueniantur. Et quod quilibet Burgensis Oxoniæ pro familia sua respondeat; ita quod, si aliquis de familia sua mortem vel grauem iniuriam vel alicui clerico vel suis inferat, malefactorem exhibeat idem Burgensis, ut fiat de eo iustitia, alioqui infligatur pœna secundum consuetudinem regni. Et quod quotiescunque debeat fieri temptatio panis et ceruisiæ ab eisdem Burgensibus, præcedenti die denuntietur Cancellario et procuratoribus Vniuersitatis prædictæ, ut per se vel per aliquos ad hoc deputatos per ipsos si voluerint intersint temptationi prædictæ, alioqui non valeat temptatio. Si vero dicti Cancellarius et procuratores Vniuersitatis prædictæ per se vel per suos interesse noluerint, ad prædictam temptationem nihilominus procedatur. In quorum omnium testimonium Dominus Radulphus filius Nicholai senescallus Domini Regis ad præceptum eiusdem Regis, huic scripto sigillum suum apposuit; eodem Domino Rege per literas mandante Vicecomiti Maiori et Balliuis Oxoñ, ut prædictas libertates inuiolabiliter obseruent et faciant obseruari; quas etiam Dominus Rex fecit irrotulari anno regni 33. Nos autem prædictam concessionem prædictis scholaribus super præfatis libertatibus de præcepto nostro factam ut prædictum est, ratam habentes et gratam; eam præsentibus literis nostris patentibus scholaribus antedictis concedimus et sigilli nostri munimine roboramus. Teste meipso apud Wodestoke 2j° die Junij anno regni nostri 52°. (1268.)

In qualibet autem parochia villæ Oxoniæ sint duo homines electi de legalioribus parochianis et jurati quod in qualibet quindena inquirant diligenter ne quis suspectus hospitetur in parochia, et si aliquis receptauerit aliquem per tres noctes in domo sua, respondeat pro eo. Nullus etiam Regratarius emat victualia in villa Oxoniæ vel extra versus villam venientia, nec aliquis emat nec iterum vendat ante horam nonam, et si fecerit, amercietur, et rem emptam amittat. Si laicus inferat clerico grauem vel enormem læsionem, statim capiatur; et, si magna sit læsio, incarceretur in castro Oxoniæ, et ibi detineatur quousque clerico satisfaciat, et hoc arbitrio Cancellarij et Vniuersitatis Oxoniæ si clericus proteruus fuerit; si minor vel leuis sit iniuria, incarceretur in villa. Pistores et Braciatores Oxoniæ, in primo transgressu suo, non puniantur, sed in secundo amittant panem, et in 3° transgressu habeant iudicium de pilloria. Quilibet pistor habeat sigillum suum et signet panem suum per quod possit cognosci cuius panis sit. Quicunque de villa Oxoniæ brasiaverit ad vendendum, exponat signum suum, alioquin amittat ceruisiam. Vina Oxoñ vendantur indifferenter tam clericis quam laicis, ex quo inbrechiata fuerint. Temptatio panis fiat bis in anno, videlicet in quindena post festum S. Michaelis, et citra festum S. Mariæ in Martio; et assisa ceruisiæ fiat eisdem terminis secundum valorem bladi et brasij. Et quotiescunque fieri debeat temptatio panis et ceruisiæ, intersit Cancellarius prædictæ Vniuersitatis vel aliqui ex parte sua ad hoc deputati si super hoc requisiti interesse voluerint; quod si non intersint, nec super hoc requisiti fuerint, nihil valeat temptatio illa. In cuius rei testimonium has literas nostras eidem Vniuersitatis fieri fecimus patentes. Teste meipso apud Wodestoke. XVIII die Junij anno regni nostri 39. Illud igitur quod superius expressum est, quod scilicet quatuor Aldermanni et octo ex discretioribus et legalioribus Burgensibus villæ prædictæ ipsis Aldermannis associati vel associandi iurent nobis fidelitatem in præsentia nostra, et sint asistentes, et consulentes Maiori et Balliuis prædictis, ad ea quæ superius sunt expressa, sic volumus obseruari, ut si præsentes non extiterimus, præstetur iuramentum prædictum coram alio quem loco nostri ad hoc duximus assignandum. ## Inquisitions 3 Henry IV.

The following inquisitions are printed as an illustration of the state of the town, and of judicial proceeding therein, a century or so later than the earlier records. The Commission of Enquiry appears to be addressed to some officer of the Crown, and to the town authorities, viz. the Mayor, the Mayor of the preceding year, and another justice of the peace, with a view especially of enquiring and reporting on the misdeeds of a clerk, one John Wynter. The authorities make their return about this person, but they also give a long list of thieves and receivers of stolen goods in the City, and particularly of one Morris Macadam and his associates in crime. The returns also give an account of a gang of housebreakers and thieves from Ireland, who infested the town, and were harboured by well-known receivers. A second inquisition held the same day before a different jury, deals with the offences of another clerk, and with the dishonesty of certain tanners at Oxford and Abingdon, who sell leather which is insufficiently prepared. The sale of leather by the foot (I presume the square foot) has not come under my notice elsewhere. The reference to a statute seems to be that prayed for 18 Ric. II. Rot. Parl. III. 331. a. The average price of a tanned back at this date is about 3*s*. The juries it will be observed are twelve in each inquisition.

UNIVERSITY AND TOWN.

THE FRAY ON S. SCHOLASTICA'S DAY (Feb. 10), 1354.

THE story of the Fray on S. Scholastica's Day (Feb. 10), 1354, is told in Wood's Annals of Oxford, Vol. I. p. 455. There had been, it seems, a growing feeling of dissatisfaction among the townspeople at the privileges of the University, and of ill-will towards the Scholars. It is, I think, not unlikely that the natural jealousy of the two Corporations, or perhaps, to be more accurate, of the two chartered institutions, was made keener on the part of the City by the violence and insubordination of the students, whose numbers, if we can trust Gascoigne, had been greatly reduced in consequence of the plague, which had been particularly deadly in Oxford, five years before. The quarrel began at a tavern, kept by John de Bereford, who is referred to with others in the documents which follow. Bereford, if Wood is to be relied on, and he probably got all his information from Twyne, subsequently became Mayor of the Town. Swyndlestock's Inn or Hostel had once belonged to a Jew of that name, and afterwards came to the City. It was subsequently known as the Mermaid Tavern, and was, according to Wood, at the North-East corner of Carfax.

It appears that the attack on the Scholars was organised by John de Bereford, Richard Forester, and Robert Lardiner, who not only got together an armed mob in the Town itself, but incited a number of country folk to join them. These upland people forced the west gate, and displaying a black flag, took an active part in the outrages, which lasted it seems for three or four days. Wood gives the names of some among the murdered students, and it is noteworthy that a large proportion of these victims were Irishmen. The King was at Woodstock, and was soon informed of what had happened. The Bishop of Lincoln, John Gynewell or Gindwell (June 2, 1347—Aug. 5, 1362) at once excommunicated the aggressors, and put the Town under an interdict. The documents which follow illustrate the course of procedure taken by the ecclesiastical and civil authorities. So serious was the alarm, that the University was dispersed, and was recalled with difficulty.

The Town charters were surrendered, as were also those of the University. Those of the former were in time restored, but the privileges of the burgesses were greatly curtailed, being transferred in many particulars to the University. From this award, dates the control of the market by the University, a most important concession at those times. It is evident that in Twyne's day there was a controversy as to the date at which the Town's charter was restored, and I have thought it expedient to print Twyne's note, along with the documents. The agreement between the University and Town is given in Norman French, and is substantially the same as the Bishop's award.

As might be expected in the case of Corporations, the liabilities and the penalties which the burgesses incurred, and certain other memories of the 'great conflict,' remained till or near living memory. The numerous oaths of a Master of Arts, up to the end of the first quarter in the present century, included two, that the inceptor would not lecture at Stamford or elsewhere, and that he would disclaim Henry Simeon. My late friend, Bp. Jacobson, told me that these were expedients adopted when the University had dispersed, and some of its members were reluctant to return, and he added that when King's College, London, was established, certain members of Oxford University, who had been invited to take part in the instruction given at that Institution, declined the offer reluctantly, on the ground that the acceptance of such offices would be at variance with the oaths which they had taken at their inception.

The payment of the forty silver pennies lasted to about the date at which the Master's oaths were revised. The late Dr. Macbride told me that a considerable Oxford citizen, one of the partners in the Old Bank, had declared that if he were elected Mayor, he could not acquiesce in the ceremony. He was elected Mayor, and kept his word. The University sued him, and recovered a hundred marks from him, which it gave to the Radcliffe Infirmary, where it is or was duly registered on the table of benefactions. It appears that the award originally imposed an annual payment of a hundred marks from the Town to the University, which the latter excused, in consideration of the forty pence, though still retaining the right to exact the larger sum in case of default or contumacy. The Mayor's oath of allegiance and obedience to the University continued still later, for many of us can still remember the refusal of the Mayor to take the oath in Vice-Chancellor Williams' time. In both cases, as the ransom and the oath were law, the abolition was effected by Act of Parliament.

A short time before the outbreak of Wat Tyler's insurrection, a somewhat similar outrage occurred at Cambridge, the particulars and issues of which can be found in Cooper's Annals of Cambridge, under date 1381. Here, however, the townspeople did not apparently proceed to bloodshed. I have commented on this event in my Six Centuries of Labour and Wages, p. 264. Cooper puts it on June 6, i.e. four days before Tyler's insurrection. The authority which I followed sets it on April 30, six weeks earlier*. I concluded, as Mr. Cooper did, that it was an illustration of the discontent which was being felt at the time against exceptional privileges. In this case the Town was fined, and compelled to make restitution. Their right to the assise and the police of the market was taken from the burgesses, and conferred on the University, but in other particulars their charter was restored. The tenets of Wiklif's poor priests are exceedingly acceptable in the Eastern counties, where indeed Lollardy was the popular religion well into the Reformation. What the opinions of this most remarkable man were, and how far in advance he was in his judgment as to what constitutes the basis of civil government, is to be found in the recovered treatise of his, entitled de Dominio civili, which has been recently edited by Mr. Lane Poole, of Balliol College. I do not see how any one can interpret the undercurrents of political thought and action in England, perhaps from his days to our own, and particularly the theory of official or ministerial responsibility, without studying this volume. The theologians of the day held that rulers were responsible indeed, but to God only. Wiklif alleged that they were responsible to man also, and his followers were convinced that his reasoning was conclusive.

Note by Twyne.

This writinge beareth date, nine dayes before the date of the Restitution of the Towne liberties, and no more. For the Townes pretended Charter of Restitution beareth date 26o Julij anno Edwardi 3i 29 which twenty sixt day of July, fell out that yere vppon a Sunday, beinge the next daye after St. James his daye, which was that yere vppon a Saturdaye, the Dominicall letter beinge D. And then, it seemes, the Towne was not pardoned for 2 reasons: first because the Lords of the Councell here appoynteth, that the Towne should giue to the vniuersitie 250li for all manner of amends, exceptis morte et mahemio &c. secondly because here is order taken, for such as should be tried for the saide great conflict, to be bound ouer to appeare before the Justices as Judges at the next Sessions or assises, for trespasses and felonies then committed &c. which when it was, I cannot yet finde. Another Breife there is followinge a little after, of the said King Edward the 3. directed to the Sheriffe of Oxoñ for takinge securitie of those that should be or had byn allready indicted for that conflict, and for hauinge their bodies coram dictis Justiciariis ad proximam sessionem suam &c. dated apud Westmonasterium July 16 anno regni 29. Nowe these sessions or Assises, wherein these Townesmen were to be tried for their outrages and felonies committed in the great conflict, must by this account happen betwixt the 17th daye of July, and the 26 daye of the same moneth which is the daye of the date of the restitution of the Townes liberties; or else, what will become of the matter? Seinge we cannot suppose that they were restored sufficiently and lawefully, before they were pardoned, because they were not capable of liberties without a pardon; and pardoned they could not be conueniently, before they were tried, and had answered to the lawe &c. therefore we must suppose that they were both tried and pardoned, before they were restored: and yet betwixt the 17th of July, and the 26th, we neither finde mention of either of their triall, or pardon: And when the next Sessions or assises were held that yere, next after the 17th of July, we cannot yet be certified.

* Retraditione forsan. (Twyne.)

But sure we are, that those next followeinge Assises or Sessions which were to be held for the triall of felonies committed at the great conflict, were not held betwixt the saide 17th daye of July, and the 26th daye thereof, but afterwardes; because the King here saith, that in case the saide summe of money viz. 250li be not paid in before Munday next after St. James his daye, then John Bedeford, and John Norton, (who had byn let out of prison it seemes, to be agents with the Towne for the saide money) should be recommitted to prison againe (viz. to the kinges Marshallsey) citra tertium diem post festum S. Petri ad vincula proxime sequens St. Peters day, beinge the first of August; and so they were to be reimprisoned againe, in default of non payment of that money or securitie giuen, betwixt the Munday next after St. James his daye, being the 25 of July, and the third daye of August, there to be kept, against the time of the next sessions or assises of the Judges &c.

And therefore the date of the charter of the restitution of the Townes liberties, is very improbable; and implieth, as if they were both pardoned and restored to their liberties, before the Sessions came, and consequently before they were tried, which is a nonsence: for then why should they be tried at all? should they be tried for that, for which they were allready pardoned?

Sol: The pardon respects the Corporation. The Tryall, particular persons.

Note that the great conflict happened vppon S. Scholastiks daye beinge 10 February 1354. Then afterwardes, in the lent Assises, as it appeareth by two seuerall commissions of the kinges, sent forth to certaine Judges &c. 6o Martij et xvo Martij, the Townesmen who had byn the principall ringeleaders of this vprore and outrage, were only indicted of felonies committed in that conflict, and some perhaps executed for the same, because the kinge biddeth the Judges to proceede therein, and doe Justice, secundum legem et consuetudinem regni &c. the others, as it seemes remayned vnder bayle though indicted allso, vntyll the next Assises at Michelmasse, beinge bound ouer to those Assises, and to receaue their triall at that time. In the meane time, both the Vniuersitie and Towne, in the moneth of Maye, gaue vp their liberties into the kinges handes; the vniuersitie receauinge pardon and restitution againe of their liberties twice, betwixt the 20th of Maye, and the 27th of June. Then, vppon the 26 of July the same yere, commeth in the Restitution of the Towne liberties, exceptinge such as the King had taken awaye from them, by vertue of their submission and giuen to the Vniuersitie. Nowe, seinge that their restitution must suppose a pardon (as well as the vniuersities did) and that pardon should either be ioyned with the restitution (as the vniuersities be) or else come forth seuerally before it, to make them capable of receauinge their liberties, hence it is, that we distrust the saide restitution, and demaunde the pardon, which they cannot produce, because as we thinke, they neuer had any, at King Edward the 3 his handes especially; neither doe I thinke, that the Masters of the vniuersitie, videlicet, those 3 famous Regents The Charletons so often named in those businesses about the great conflict, and at whose direction, all thinges were then done, as well for the vniuersitie as the Towne, would suffer or consent, that the Towne should be pardoned before all thinges betwixt the vniuersitie and the Towne was fully transacted and finished*. For what sence was it, that the kinge should giue them a pardon, and yet binde them ouer to the next Assises at Michelmasse followinge, to receaue their triall for all the felonies and outrages committed by them in the saide great conflict?

Item whereas Offendors haue byn greatly encouraged, because the charters of pardon haue byn so swiftly granted in times past of manslaughters robberies felonies and other trespasses against the peace, it is ordeyned and enacted, that such charters shall not be granted, but only where the kinge maye doe it by his othe, that is to saye, where a man slayeth another in his owne defence, or by misfortune &c. In the statutes at large. 2° Edwardi 3i p. 68. in a statute made at Northampton. Another statute made anno 4° Edwardi 3i for the maintenance of that former statute p. 71 ibidem. Another statute made to the same purpose anno Edwardi 3i 10. p. 76. Another statute made to the same purpose anno regni 14o. p. 80. very peremptory. recitetur si videatur. And that charters of pardon for felonies which shalbe granted at any mans suggestion, the saide suggestion, and the name of him that maketh the suggestion shalbe comprised in the saide charter; because the kinge had granted many pardons (as it seemes) vppon feigned and vntrue suggestions. Edwardi 3i 27. p. 101.

And this may be another reason, why the Towne of Oxford or the Townes-men, could not be pardoned at all after the great conflict for the murders and felonies therein, namely because we finde such strict statutes made against grantinge pardons to such offendars in King Edward the 3. his time, before the great conflict, and afterwarde allso *.

Note allso, that the kinge (Edward the 3) in his charter of the restitution of the Towne liberties biddeth the Townesmen vse all their other former liberties (not taken from them and giuen to the Vniuersitie) plene ad gaudere prout ante captionem et turbationem prædictas, rite et rationabiliter vti et gaudere consueuistis &c.

When as first and foremost, he had granted them no pardon, and secundly they were not yet tried vppon their felonies &c. and thirdly within two dayes of this very restitution, the saide kinge had sent forth his Breife directed to the Mayor and Bayliffes, for the impeachinge of one of theire maine liberties, viz. for strangers to sell wine there, fish, flesh and other kinde of victualls et alias marcandisas? by retayle or parcells as they sawe good &c. Teste meipso apud Westmonasterium 28 die Julij anno regni Angliæ 29 et Franciæ 16 which was iust 2 dayes after the date of the supposed charta restitutionis libertatum Burgensium Oxoñ post magnum conflictum &c.: Liber Vicecancellarij p. 26. 2. et in ꝯ p. 98. absque impedimento seu calumnia eisdem mercatoribus inferenda &c. although the kinge doth there acknowledge that this was a statute of the lande, viz. that strangers might sell their vittayles and wares by retayle in Lundon or any other good Townes &c.

Nowe our Townesmen did not nor could not hinder these strangers from so doinge in regard of their liberties (which we deny was restored vnto them as yet) but in regard that they were then themselves imployed in getting and procuringe victualls and necessaries for the schollers, and for that reason were licenced by the kinge to haue their libertie, eundo circa provisionem victualium et aliorum necessariorum ad opus dictorum scholarium et circa alia negotia quæcunque &c. and that only cause allso had the kinges letters of protection to endure for one yere after the date thereof, which was 2j° Maij anno regni 29. and this was the true and only reason why the Townesmen would not suffer other strangers to bringe victualls and other necessaries to the Towne and to vtter it by retayle &c. not because they had their liberties restored: or if they had, then what a restitution was this, that the kinge should restore them their liberties and yet 2 dayes afterwarde take a maine libertie from them*.

* This argument would in some part reach the Vniuersitie also which had the kinges pardon on this occasion vide sequentem paginam. (Twyne.)

The very same daye allso viz. Julij 28. anno regni 29. the same king sent forth other letters patent to reuoke and recall from the Towne, the priuiledge of weapon bearinge, cancelland' &c. and why should a man thinke that the saide King would not haue recalled allso the Clarkeship of the market which standeth yet to this daye vppon their charter, as well as he recalled this of weapon bearinge, if he made full restitution rightly and duly &c. or that he would not haue recalled all the charters which he had made for the Chancellors and Mayors holdinge of the clarkeship together coniunctiue or that he would not haue recalled the veiwe of franke pledge, when he had taken from it, the assisa panis et cervisiæ, assaiam mensurarum et ponderum, the custody of the peace and weapon bearinge and the cognissance of the streets if they had it, and Regraters and forestallers &c.

Relaxatio sententiæ excommunicationis et interdicti super villa et Communitate Burgensium Oxoñ ratione magni conflictus cum scholaribus Vniuersitatis per Episcopum Lyncolniensem Diocesanum inflicte.

Johannes permissione diuina Lyncolniensis Episcopus dilectis filijs Abbati monasterij Oseney ac Decano Christianitatis Oxoniæ nostræ diocesis, necnon vniuersis et singulis Ecclesiarum Rectoribus Vicariis et Capellanis parochialibus, per dictum Decanatum constitutis salutem gratiam et benedictionem. Dudum antiquus hostis humani generis Calliditatis suas adeo laxauit habenas quod inter pacificos filios Magistros et Scholares vniuersitatis Oxoñ ac communitatem laicorum ipsius villæ grauissimam suscitauit discordiæ motionem. Alios quidem dictorum scholarium potestas eorundem laicorum vulnerauit, alios interfecit, spolia abstulit et domos eorum fregit et disrupit et dictæ vniuersitatis pulchritudinem quasi penitus dissipauit; propter quæ et dictarum enormitatum excessum in ipsam Communitatem laicorum interdicti sententiam protulimus de consilio peritorum, quam ijdem laici per quædam tempora in animarum suarum pernitiem contempserunt. Sed tandem Authore Ecclesiæ superante rubore suffusi se ad vnitatem Ecclesiæ conuerterunt emendasque dictæ Vniuersitati fecerunt et de consensu eiusdem in personis procuratorum ipsius communitatis cum potestate sufficienti in ea parte coram nobis comparentium illud interdictum sub certa forma duximus relaxandum; et certas pænitentias iniunximus eidem Communitati pro dictis exces-

Vide postea in Instrumento relaxationis interdicti per Episcopum Lyncoln, p. 535. and all the deedes and writinges concerninge that matter, which was allso confirmed by the kinges authority; and this is the securitie here spoken of: and vntyll this security was giuen (which was 2 yere after the great conflict) howesoeuer the schollers might perhaps repayre to the Vniuersitie, and the Masters resume their lectures and such terme businesses; yet I doe not thinke that the Towne either receaued pardon, or restitution of their liberties, of the kinge. Commissio ad audiendum et terminandum de insultu quodam pernitioso in scholares Oxoñ perpetrato.

Rex dilectis et fidelibus suis Ricardo de Stafford, Henrico Grene, Roberto de Thorpe, Willelmo de Notton, et Hugoni de Sadelingstanes salutem. Quia ex notorio et horribili clamore recepimus quod quamplures malefactores et pacis nostræ perturbatores Villæ Oxoñ et partium adiacentium vniuersitatem nostram Oxoñ dispergi et dissolui facere callide machinantes in manu armata vexillis explicatis more guerrino ad mansa Magistrorum et Scholarium in eadem Vniuersitate accedentes, mansa illa felonice fregerunt, et quam plures scholares et eorum seruientes ibidem nequiter interfecerunt, et quosdam ex iis verberauerunt, vulnerauerunt, imprisonauerunt et male tractauerunt, et quosdam ex iis membris mutilauerunt, quosdam de bonis et rebus suis depredati fuerunt, et portas villæ prædictæ, ac ostia quorundam mansorum ipsorum scholarium felonice combusserunt, et magistros et scholares dictæ Vniuersitatis ab eadem hostiliter fugauerunt, et viris Religiosis et alijs personis Ecclesiasticis de vita et membris suis grauiter comminati fuerunt et indies comminantur, et quam plurima alia felonias et facinora, ibidem perpetrarunt in nostri contemptum et pernitiosum exemplum, et contra formam statuti de armis contra pacem non portandis editi, et contra pacem nostram. Nos, tam enormia crimina nolentes impunita sub right, pardoned the Schollers of all transgressions: and this he signified into euery shire by writts directed to the Sheriffes, they to proclayme the same, for more notice of the thinge: and so, in summer followinge, the Vniuersitie began againe to flourish, students resortinge thither from ech side. Thus Hollinshed; whereas in the statute booke of acts of parliament there is no mention to be founde of any parlament that was held that yere, viz. in the 29 of Edw. 3. nor yet in the 30th yere. But in his 31 yere, and in the yere of our Lord 1357. it appeareth that there was a parliament wherein some acts of parliament were made, which is the yere that this present charter or rescript of the Bishop of Lyncoln beareth date, and which peraduenture might be done at the instance of the kinge and Lords of the parliament, as it is here in a manner expressed &c. and this was the ende of the quarrell then put, whereof Hollinshed speaketh, though he were mistaken in the yere.

The answeare of the Comissarie and Schollers of the Vniuersitie of Oxford to a bill of Complaynte contayninge diuers articles exhibited against them by Mayor and Burgesses of the towne of Oxford.

1. To the first article the sayd Comissarie and Schollers sayd by protestacions not knowinge any such graunte to be made to the sayd Mayor and Burgesses as in the sayd Article is surmitted. And yf any such graunte were made that the sayd graunte at this presente tyme is of non efficacie nor strength as euidently shalbe proued at such tyme as the sayd graunte yf any such be shalbe published, Neuertheles for answeare the sayd Comissarie and Schollers sayd that our Sourraigne Lord the King's most noble progenitors by diuers and sundrie theire letters patents haue graunted vnto the Chauncellour, and schollers of the sayd Vniuersitie that the sayd Schollers and their seruants shall and may quietly excersise any manner of marchandyse by retaill or otherwise, and buy and sell all manner of goods vendible . . . soe alway that they be cellable what the Burgesses of the sayd towne, the same Calliacion to be assessed by the sayd Chancellour, his Comissarie or his Depute for the tyme beinge without that the sayd Chancellour procure or cause forrayne[r]s * to excersise

merchandinge within the sayd towne or by theire might or extente power doe bere or mantayne the sayd foryners to continue in theire wrongfull excersisinge of theire marchandinge as in the sayd bill is surmitted to the which the predicessors of the sayd nowe Mayor have accorded and agreed.

2. The 2d. Article the sayd Comissarie and Proctours sayd that for the quietnes of the students in the sayd Vniuersitie they have full power and autoritie by force of the graunts aboue sayd to hold plees aswell in causes criminall as in detts, contracts and other such like, where the one partie is a scholler or a scholler's seruante; and to make proces agaynst the parties either by the common lawe or by the statuts and customes of the Vniuersitie at the libertie and pleasure of the sayd Chancellour or his Comissarie for the tyme beinge. And for more quietnes of the students of the sayd Vniuersitie they have alsoe power by the autoritie aboue sayd to compell the parties where the one partie is a priuiledge[d] person to put in caution or gage that he shall not serve the sayd scholler or the sayd priuiledged person but only befor the sayd Chaunceller, Comissarie or his depute without that that the sayd comissarie comitted any person to prison to whom any dette is owinge or any trespasse comitted there to remayne vntill he hath founde sewrtie that he shall not sewe for his recompence and deutie accordinge to the King's lawes but only befor the sayd Chancellour, or that they determin any matters without any due corse of the common lawe of the land as in the sayd bill is surmitted *.

3. To the firste parte of the sayd 3d. article the Comissarie and Proctors make answeare and say that they knowe of noe such priuiledge and libertie graunted to the sayd Mayor and Burgesses as in the sayd article is contayned, but they say that aswell by especiall grauntes and chardges as by consente agreemente or accord of the sayd Mayor and Burgesses, it is manifeste and doth appeare expressly that all and euerie freeman of the towne of Oxford be bounde to appeare in temporall causes befor the Chauncellour, his Comissarie or

* surmytted in margin.

depute after lawefull admonition made by the beedles or other officers and the sayd Chauncellour, Comissarie or his depute doth not at any tyme prison, suspend or banish any person but for and vpon great and vrgent consideracions, and after lawefull and rightefull processe of the priuiledge, customes, statuts and liberties of the sayd Vniuersitie, or by our soueraygne Lord the Kinges lawes, and yf the sayd comissarie att any tyme called the Mayor by citacion to answeare to any article conserninge his soules health, that was for certayne articles concerninge the violacion of his othe giuen by hime for the obseruance of the priuiledge, liberties and customes of the sayd Vniuersitie which Michaell Hethe and William Fleminge have nowe late in tyme of theire Mayoraltie more broken and more notoriously violatt then any Mayor befor them by the remembraunce of any man beinge in life in the sayd Vniuersitie. And the Burgesses or the inhabitants of Oxford be not inquieted by the sayd Comissarie, schollers and clarks. But the sayd comissarie and schollers doe say that they be dayly augmented by the sayd Mayor, Bayliffe and Burgesses of Oxford, makinge confideracions [&] conspirases continually and pykinge of quarells day by day in diuers sondrie places of the Vniuersitie, nothinge regardinge the King's heigh priuiledge but vncharitably and maliciously without any good grounde, doe resiste and breke the sayd priuiledge, liberties and customes contrarie to theire othe, great danger of their soules, enquietinge of the students and consequently hinderance of learning and excersise of vertue, without that that the sayd comissarie and schollers doe cite any persons inhabited within the sayd towne for causes and matters temporally or suspend, areste, imprison or banish them without any good grounde or cause as in the sayd bill is vntruly supposed.

4. To the 4th. Article the Comissarie and Schollers doe say that they knewe not any priuiledge graunted vnto the towne of Oxford but they say that the sayd Chaunceller coniontly with the Mayor in the tyme of Edward the firste had the Vewe of Franks plege and to enquire of the purpresiture and purprises with other comon noysaunces and to determine the same and excersise the same accordinge to the King's lawes, which liberties and priuiledges of the said Mayor for them and theyre successors for theire great extorcion and oppressinge as well of schollers as other poore people, inhabitants of the towne of Oxford, and for the haynous murdrie committed by them, by the right noble Kinge Edward the thirde were resumed, soe that since that tyme they neuer en[i]oyed any such libertie but that it was by the sayd Kinge wholly graunted to this Comissarie and schollers by the which graunte euer since the sayd Commissarie and schollers the sayd liberties have quietly enioyed and was neuer disturbed sith the tyme of the sayd Kinge Edward the thirde vnto the tyme of the Mayralty of William Fleminge and Michael Hethe without that that the sayd comissarie doth exersise the keepinge of the lawedayes without any due processe accordinge to the King's lawes as in the sayd Articles is surmitted.

5. To the 5$^{t}$. Article the sayd Comissarie and schollers say by protestacion not knowinge if any such graunte made vnto the sayd Mayor and Burgesses of Oxford, but they say that the sayd Chauncellor his Comissarie and schollers only wholly and for euer hath the whole and full autoritie of the Clerks[h]ipp of the markett and that none other clerke of the markett there ought to intermedle and doth suffer nothing to be sold but it be brought to a lawefull place for sellinge thereof, soe that they may forsee and ouerlooke the sayd markett and soe vse noe parcialitie or negligence vnlesse it bee percase of negligence towards the inhabitants of the towne as Gunter, Falofild, George Rede and Chamler with such other, which oft sith vseth forstallinge and regratinge of Markett and sellinge of much corrupte vittalls and none in Oxford soe much as they befor namyd nor willinge to be required not only to the great hurte and hinderance of the sayd Vniuersitie but alsoe to the great hurte of the common wealth of the towne and the countrie. And the sayd inhabitants vittalers of Oxford eft sins of theire perverse myndes doe sell vnto theire neighboures townsmen good wine and to schollers wine that is corrupte and nowghte. And one of them shall buy soe much beefe or mutton for iijd. as the schollers shall pay iiijd. for. And a payre of shooes for viijd. that schollers shall not have vnder xd. with such like of all other marchandyse and vittaylls.

6. To the vj$^{th}$ Article the sayd Comissarie and schollers seyen that the fines and amarciaments of all maner of things doth apertayne to the sayd Chauncellor his commissarie and to the Vniuersitie by gifte and graunte of the King's most noble progeniters and soe by his grace confirmed without that they appertayne to the sayd Mayor and Bailiff's, and farther more they say that they neuer arested felons &c. but that they might lawefully doe as it shall expresly appeare by the graunts of our soueraigne Lord the King's gracious progenitors and alsoe by composition and aggreements of the parties. And that they neuer made sesure of any felons goodes to theire vse or vses or conuerted any part to theire owne vse as the sayd Article is vntruly surmised.

7. To the vij Article the sayd Comissarie and schollers say that they knewe not of any such graunts as in the sayd Article is comprised. But for answeare they say that the sayd Chaunceller his comissarie and schollers have alwayes vsed them whereof the mynde of man is not to the contrarie as one of [the] liberties of the sayd Vniuersitie to haue ouersight and punishmente of diuers occupacions. That is to say the sayd comissarie as yett hath made noe incorporacion but vseth himselfe in certayne compositions and orders as diuers of his predicessors haue tyme out of mynde vsed amonge the vittailers and artificers &c. without takeinge of sumes of money other then such penalties as by our Soueraigne Lord the Kinges lawes and customes of the sayd Vniuersitie hath bine vsed and bine alwayes accustomed to be payd to the sayd commissarie by there owne assente and willinge agreemente. And yf the inhabitants, vittailers and craftsmen be impourished it is other by the reason of the couenticles, confederacyes and conspiracies makeinge when they should be aboute theire marchandise or worldly busines or els by great sumes of money for theire first cominge in other theyre occupacions or els the Mayor, Bayliffs and Burgesses of Oxford exacte vpon them for theyre freedome amerciaments, fines, tolls or other exaccions as by the incircumspecte occupiinge of theire craftes and not by the Comissarie and Schollers of the Vniuersitie of whom they have all cheife and principall livings as it is open and manifest. And ouer that the Mayor and Bayliffs mantayne incorporacions contrarie to the King's statute and common wealth of Oxford as Cordwayner, taylours, glouers, fishmongers, with such other to the great impourishmentes of the schollers there. In soe much where they for a pott of sea fish the price thereof beinge not aboue 3*s*., at the most at any tyme iiij*s*., brought to theire dores without labour or payne of theire behalfe they make of euery pott at the least a riall and sumtyme a marke wherefor theire paynes in sellinge of the potts of fish vj$^{d}$. or viij$^{d}$. for euerie some were sufficient gaynes.

8. To the 8$^{th}$ article the sayd Chaunceller and schollers seyen they did neuer pursue or attempte to obtayne any newe graunte of our soueraigne Lord the Kinge that nowe is though the King's grace of his mere mocyon and by the contemplacion of the Lord Cardinall did build a new priuiledge which they have not or never intend to putt in execution any parte thereof nor yet intendeth to attempt any manner of things by the vertue of the sayd priuiledge, but that such priuiledge which they putt in execution they had and have of the meere graunts of the King's grace Most noble progenitors and by his grace confirmed and they require noe other othe or liberties of the Mayor then byn expressed in our Soueraygne Lord the King's most noble progenitours charters which is and hath bine so vsed by longe tyme: but vnder the presence of that surmised new graunte, the sayd Mayor and Bayliffe will have all the old and auncient liberties [and] priuiledges taken from the sayd Vniuersitie which they quietly have enioyed without interuption vnto the tyme that the Mayor now beinge and Michael Hethe and William Fleminge Mayors them disturbed. All which matters the sayd Comissarie and schollers are readie to verifie as by your good Lordshipp shalbe decreed, and prayinge that they may be dismissed with theire reasonable coste and chardges to them to be adiudged for the wrongfull and slanderous vexation by them in this behalf sustayned and had.

The answeare of the Mayor and Comminaltie of the towne of Oxford to the bill exhibited agaynst them by the Chaunceller and Schollers of the sayd towne.

1. To the first Article the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie seyne that they doe not affirme that the sayd Chauncellour and schollers have noe liberties for that the Chaunceller and Schollers have deliuered theire priuiledges to the King's Heighnes but the sayd Mayor and comminaltie seyne that where the sayd Chaunceller and Schollers by there craftie and suttle meanes have from tyme to tyme deuised wayes and meanes to obtayne certayne priuiledges and grauntes of such and the same things which longe befor were graunted vnto the sayd Mayor and Cominaltie. All which priuiledges and grauntes soe to them made be voyde in the lawe. And the Chaunceller and Schollers that well perceiuinge they purchased diuers bulls and censures, yett by meanes and vntrue suggestions (alleaginge that the sayd priuiledges should be for [the] good, quietnes and rest of the students of the Vniuersitie where indeede the same priuiledges reduceth the sayd schollers to temporall busines to the great vnquietnes of them) against all them that would not obey theire sayd vnlawfull priuiledges for dred whereof the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie suffered them to vsurpe and take from them diuers such liberties and francheses as have bine graunted to the predicessors of the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie by the King's most noble progenitors and by his Majestie confirmed, and moreouer the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie seyen that the sayd Chaunceller and schollers have now of late devised, compassed and immagined divers* meanes and wayes how to take from the Mayor and Comminaltie theire liberties and francheses, and for that purpose only would that the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie should by surrender resign all theire old right and title to theire liberties and francheses to the intente that the sayd Chaunceller and schollers might be

befor them in like to the same liberties and priuiledges as the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie hath and soe to shift the sayd Mayor and Cominaltie from theire prioritie to posterioritie. And finally to have theire liberties and francheses from them to theire vtter vndoeinge and contrarie to all right and conscience.

2. To the 2 Article the sayd Mayor and Comminalltie seyene that truth it is that they affirme that the sayd Chaunceller [and] Scholler[s] be not clarks of the markett and that they have neuer vsed it peaceably but by wronge vsurpacion and by such drifts and meanes as in the first Article is declared nor it cannot bee with any good equitie [and] reasone that they should be both buyers and setters of the price for they might and would then take theire neighbours goods, paying for it skantly halfe soe much as it were worth.

3. To the third Article the sayd Mayor and Cominaltie seyne that the said Chaunceller, comissarie and Schollers have not the ouer sight, reformacion and markinge of weight and measures, but only by vsurpacion and such diuises [and] meanes as the sayd first Article is rehersed without that that the Typlers and Inholders buyinge xvij galons and a halfe of good alle for xxd doe sell the same alle agayne within theire houses for v$^{s}$ or that the Vinteners doe vse vniust measures or the buchers vntrue weight[s] to the preiudice of the resyants theire, As by the sayd bill vntruely is surmised.

4. To the fourth Article the sayd Mayor and Cominaltie seyne that they withhould not from the Vniuersity any deuty of v$^{li}$ by the yeare but they seyen that the sayd Chaunceller and Schollers vsed extorciously to take certayne fines of diuers persons for licencinge of them to misuse theire occupacions which fines be now denied as lawfull that for them to doe without that that any chaplayne within the sayd Vniuersity have vsed to celebrate the offices of masses and diryg[e]s to pray specially for the King's grace and his noble progenitors accordinge to theire dewtyes in that behalfe.

5. To the v. Article the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie seyne that they doe were weapons and alwayes have vsed soe to doe for they say that theire is noe lawe nor statute to the contrarie to prohibite them soe to doe, but that be acts made by the sayd Chaunceller and Schollers to the intent that they might the more easely doe displeasure and execute theire malice vpon the poore inhabitants of the sayd towne of which Acte if any corporacion be had that was by such sinister meanes as in the first Article is declared and soe voyd of noe effecte.

6. To the 6 Article the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie seyne that the King our Soueraigne Lord and his noble progenitors have graunted vnto the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie power and auctoritie to keepe the lawe day within the precincts of the sayd towne by reason whereof they have vsed tyme out of mynde and yet doe vse to reforme all common noyances from tyme to tyme as neede requireth without that the sayd Chaunceller and schollers have any lawefull title or auctoritie to keepe any lawe day within the sayd towne or that they haue any maner of right or tytill to keepe any maner of courte in the Guilde hall of the sayd towne. And without that that the Vniuersitie and other of the King's subiects have sustayned iniuries and anoyances by inordinate price of vitles and vnwholsome preparacion of the same or that they suffer combrances by kinde, swynne, Blocks, dongehills and other like as by the sayd Article vntruly is surmised and without that that euer any dowt or lawfull redresse or reformacion have bin made by any Courte by the sayd Chaunceller as by the said Article is alsoe vntruly surmised.

7. To the vij$^{th}$. Article the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie seyne that yf the sayd Chaunceller [and] Schollers had any autoritie to committ any freeman of the towne or other person to ward as they have not yet the sayd Mayor and Cominaltie be not bounde to finde them a goale and all that there were a composition made betweene the predicessors of the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie of the one partie, and the Chaunceller and Schollers of the other partie, yet the now Mayor and Comminaltie be not bownden thereby and yf they were bounde thereby to finde them a gaole as they be not indeede. Yett whereas the sayd Chaunceller, Comissarie and Schollers partie doe vse wrongfully without any graunte or lawfull cause but only for malice and ill will to comytt any freeman of the sayd towne to ward the sayd Mayor and Cominaltie may not nor ought in such case by reason imprison any person soe vnlawfully committed vnto them.

8. To the viij Article the sayd Mayor and comminaltie seyne that the sayd Chaunceller, comissarie and Schollers doe many and sundrie tymes make partes agaynst the freemen and inhabitants of the sayd towne by citacion, suspencion, excomunicacion for temporall causes and yf the said freemen of the said towne appeare before the sayd comissarie though the Comissarie hath vsed to sweare hime forthwith to answeare to interogatories which interogatories shalbe clearely out of the matter that complaynte is made of beinge the partie in hande that theire lawe of the Vniuersitye or ciuill lawe bindeth them to answeare to such interogatories and that it is for the more health of theire soules where the parties have noe knowledge of that lawe ciuill nor yett of theyre lawes and statuts made in the Vniuersitie nor can have any indiffrent counsell there to instruikt them, wherefor many of the freemen and inhabitants of the sayd towne perceiuinge that they can have noe indiffrent iustice ministred vnto them befor the sayd Comissarie and alsoe that the sayd Comissarie have not nor ought to have any autoritie in any such causes temporall as debte and trespasses to theire determininge as they refuse to appeare befor the sayd Comissarie as lawfull is for them to doe without that that the sayd Schollers or any of them cannot have theire dewtie and right of the sayd townsmen as the sayd Article is surmised.

9. To the 9 Article the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie sayne that the Chaunceller and Schollers befor this tyme have constrayned by means and thrifts of excommunicacion, banishmente and such other meanes (as in the 1 Article is declared) the sayd Mayor and townsmen to offer att St. Marie Church and by like meanes and threfts constrayneth them to be bounde by obligacion for performaunce of the same, which obligacion is clearly voyd by the course of the common lawe Wherevnto the sayd Mayor and cominaltie prayen to be remitted for the due triall of the sayd obligacion.

10. To the 10th Article the sayd Mayor and Comminaltie seyne that the sayd Chaunceller and Schollers by manifest threats * of excomunicacion and Banishmente and by diuers other sinister means subtilly deuised an othe to be giuen to the Mayor, Aldermen, Bayliffs and others of the sayd towne in which othe amongst other things it was contayned that the sayd Mayor, Aldermen, Bayliffs and others should obserue mayntayne and keepe all the statuts ordinances and lawes of the Vniuersitie made or to be made, and after that the sayd Chaunceller and Schollers have att theire congregacion made diuers statuts and lawes from tyme to tyme with extreame and vnreasonable penalties vpon the inhabitants of the sayd towne. ## The Quarrel and Suit about the City Mill.

Among other property possessed by the Town of Oxford, and as was said by charter of the first of John (1199), were the Castle Mills, in S. Thomas' parish. Mills were among the most valuable franchises possessed by landowners, because it was universally the case, that the inhabitants of a manor were compellable to use the Lord's Mill, and to incur the liability of such tolls as the Miller was entitled to charge. The discretion of this personage was however checked by the police of the Manor, for if he were presented for extortion, and the case was proved against him, he was liable to a fine, and fines imposed on the Miller frequently occur in the Records of Court Rolls. It may be expedient to illustrate these facts by direct evidence.

When Merton College abandoned cultivation on its own account on their Cuxham estate, the income which the College derived from this Manor, inclusive of the rents of Assise, the contingencies of the Manor, and the receipts of the court, was about £12 a year, the incidents referred to being over £5. But the rent of the water-mill was £2 10*s.*, and of the fulling-mill 13*s.* 4*d.*, for occasion was taken to levy a tax on this necessary process in dressing cloth. But the number of inhabitants in the village could not have been more than fifty. The miller's tax was therefore a notable charge on the inhabitants, as he had to live after paying his rent. In all likelihood, it amounted to at least £7 10*s.* a year, and it is no wonder that the system, as well as the representative of it, were unpopular.

Now the Town (after Henry VIII's reign, the City) of Oxford claimed to have the monopoly of grinding corn for all the burgesses resident therein. There were other ancient mills in Oxford, besides those of the Castle. The monks of Oseney had a mill, and most likely other monasteries which contained running streams within their precincts. The manor of Holywell certainly had two, of which the most important was that known as King's Mill, purchased it appears in the fifteenth century, the weir and fall of which is at the exit into the Marston-road, of what is now called Mesopotamia. The other was just below the grange, and on the other side of the stream which encloses the Magdalene College Water Walk. The privileges of the manor of Holywell were extensive. The manor was neither in the Town, nor in the County, and before it came into the possession of Merton College, the privileges of Holywell Manor were successfully insisted on. See above, p. 212.

If the Town took toll on all the inhabitants for the use of its mill, and enforced its real or reputed rights, it kept its mills in good order. Some of the fullest information which I have obtained for the price of mill-stones of the best kind comes from the City Archives. A few years before the transactions occur which the following pleadings refer to, the City had gone to the expense of over £25 for a pair of stones to their mill, probably the new or third mill which they had recently set up. The City claimed the right of confiscating corn which had been ground at other mills, and to hold a Court Leet for the punishment of offenders and defaulters. In their pleadings they allege that the profit of the mills is the only source of income on which they can rely for the payment of the King's fee-farm rent of £55 6*s.* 8*d.* or 83 marks a year. It would seem that this fee-farm rent of the mills must be distinguished from the fee-farm of the town, the greater part of which had long been granted to the lepers of St. Bartholomew in Cowley, though the complainants allege that the profit of the mills is necessary in order that this ancient fee-farm rent might be paid.

It seems that certain Bakers claimed to be privileged persons, and thereupon to be quit of any service to the City, being consequently entitled to grind their corn where they pleased. They had therefore resorted to the King's Mill in Holywell Parish. In consequence of the mention of Mr. Harris' name as Mayor, Twyne concluded that the pleadings were at or about the year 1609. There was no doubt a Francis Harris, Mayor of Oxford in 1609–10, who seems to have, according to Anthony Wood, negotiated the sale of the Austin Friars to the foundress of Wadham College, and stipulated that his nephew should be one of the first fellows. This young man died in 1614. (Wood's Colleges and Halls.)

But the date of the pleadings appears to be settled by an entry in the Register-book of Merton College, under the years 1606 and 1608. The College determined to defend the interests of those who used its Mill, and at a trial held at Nisi Prius during the Oxford Assises in this year, the Jury found against the City, and the costs, £13 6*s.* 6*d.*, were paid to the College from the City cash. On this the City authorities summoned those who ground their corn at other than the Castle Mills, 'before the Barons of the Exchequer, sitting in Serjeants' Inn,' and the College sent their Sub-warden to London to defend the cause. Perhaps this court is chosen in consequence of the plea, reiterated in what follows, that if the customs of the Mills were lost, the King's fee-farm rent would suffer. Now at this time the Earl of Dorset was at once Lord Treasurer, and Chancellor of the University. The Barons of the Exchequer wished him to be present, probably as a person who could inform them as to the privileges of the University. But the Chancellor could not come, and therefore no decision was given.

In April, 1608, the citizens sued the defendants in Equity. But they had no better fortune here. The Court referred the cause to the Jus Commune, 'the Exchequer Chamber to state a case.' But henceforth the register of the College is silent on the subject, and one may conclude that the City was advised to drop the action, or informed that their case was hopeless. As far as my own researches are concerned, I regretted to find that the City ceased to buy mill-stones, for none appear in the City accounts thenceforward. Very possibly, the Exchequer Chamber satisfied itself that the margin, even after the monopoly was broken, was amply sufficient to secure the rent of the Crown, and that the City sublet the Mills.

Maior, Bailiffs & Commynaltie of the Towne of Oxford, fee fermors of the Towne and Castle Mills there, Complainants: Peter Porye, Alexander Hill, Bakers; Thomas Jerome, Richard Jerome, William Jerome, Millers, Defendants.

That the Complainants are seized of Oxoñ and 2 ancient Mills there called the Castle Mills and hold them of the kinge in fee farme pro redditu per Annum $55^{li}$—$6^{s}$—$8^{d}$ payable at the feast of St. Michaell and the Annunciation.

That the cheife and in effect the only matter of profit and maine raiseinge and leuijnge that rent is by the Mills aforesaid, the portmede not then accompted a part of thee fee farme.

That these Mills are and allwayes haue beene sufficient for grindinge all Corne to be spent in Oxford.

That these Mills beinge scituate on the great streame called Thames the Complainants haue alwayes vsed to maintaine and preserue the streame and watercourse cleared from obstructions to their great charges.

That they haue vsed to keepe a Leete or Mill court for presentment and punishment of defaults and offences in Millers and Grinders, and in those that doe annoyances to the streame or to the Mills, and the defaults of common bakers in grindinge else where and that all common bakers owe suite to the saide Court and alwayes haue vsed to doe the same.

That by a Custome alwayes vsed in the said Towne of Oxoñ all common bakers should and alwayes haue vsed to grind their corne at the said Mills and not elsewhere vppon payne that if any common Baker grind his corne else where then at the said Mills the same or the meale therof is to be seized as forfeited to the Complainants or their fermors: Except licence haue beene giuen to grinde elsewhere in case when for want of reparation or otherwise they could not there be serued.

That in such Cases of exception a Baker desiringe licence to grind elsewhere should tender to the Complainants or their Fermors a penny called a grist penny and soe should haue licence.

That when meale forfeited vt supra cannot be found to be seized the owner therof should be presented & amerced or fined at the said court and be examined vpon his oath how much he hath grownd from those Mills and therupon compelled to answere the due toll to the Complainants.

That in case any Baker their grindinge haue losse by default in the Millers or Grinders they should haue recompence for the same from the Complainants their fermors or Millers.

That Peter Pory and Alexander Hill common Bakers haue combined with the other Defendants to overthrowe the said custome and to withdraw the suite of the Bakers from those Mills to the Mills of Holliwell and by 2 yeares space last past haue carried and recarried sometimes secretly and sometimes by force their corne and Meale to and from Holliwell Mill so as the same could not be seized.

That the complainants' officers hauinge only thrice seised the meale so elsewhere grownd the defendants Thomas Jerome hath caused his 2 sons Richard and William to commence sixe seuerall actions of trespas and battery for the same.

That hereby his Maiestie is like to be disinherited of his Fee farme, the complainants for want of the said toll beinge disabled to pay the said Rent and farme haueinge little els wherby to leuy the same, for which they are nowe in arrerages and proces, and that the defendants may set forth howe much their hath beene ground from the Castle Mills at Holliwell Mills.

That their are 2 Incorporacions in Oxon viz^t. one the Vniuersitie consistinge of Doctors, Masters, &c: and their officers and seruants, the Colledges and Halls, Th'other the Towne consistinge of Mayor, Bayliffs and Commynaltie, and that he is a member of the former and a common Baker for those of that bodye viz^t. the Vniuersitie.

That those of the Vniuersitie haue alwayes vsed to grind their corne where they liked without restraint.

Denieth that to his knowledge the Complainants are fee fermors of the towne or of the said Mills or lawfully seised therof, and saith they haue nowe of late erected a third Mill adioyninge to th'other.

Denieth also that the said Mills in billa are sufficient for grindinge all the corne to be spent in Oxon.

Also denieth that the cheife meanes of raiseinge the fee farme resteth in the Mills or without them the complainants cannot pay the same.

Alsoe denieth that the Complainants haue vsed any such court Leete whereto Bakers should doe suite or for punishment of offences in any such common Bakers as are to haue the priuiledge of the Vniuersitie.

Denieth alsoe the custome alleadged in singulis especially that it hath any extent to any Vniuersitie Bakers or Priuiledged persons, affirminge that they for 30 yeares space in his knowledge haue ground at Holliwell Mills.

Denieth alsoe combination and confederacy alleadged &c. and secret and forcible carryinge of corne to Holliwell.

Saith there haue beene sixe seisures made of meale in the handes of Jeromes the other defendants.

First they say their are 2 distinct Corporations, vt supra, and that Peter Pory is a member of the Vniuersitie and a common Baker for them and that such haue vsed to grind where they will.

Thomas Jerome saith that for 26 yeres he hath vsed to grind for common Bakers and all others at Holliwell Mills and hath quietly carried and recarried the same till about 14 yeres since, that Dodwell then Millmaster caused a seisure of Clares Corne a common Baker and would not deliuer it (though the whole Counsell of the Cittie required him) vnlesse this defendant would enter into bond to fetch no more freemen's Corne, which he would not enter into.

Confesseth that since that time he hath beene diuerse times interrupted by seisures and yet of late without interruption till Mr. Harris was Mayor and then fiue seisures were made.

All deny that they can sett downe howe much hath beene ground at the said Holliwell Mills: and agree in all other things with Hill supra.

They say there haue bene seisures made of other men's corne beside common Bakers and the Millers haue bene cast from their horses.

They deny that they haue carried by stealth or by force or combinded and practised to withdrawe from the Castle Mills otherwise then was lawfull for them.

The replicacion of the Maior Bayliffs &c.

Maynteyne all the points of the Bill and deny that Pory and Hill defendants are members of the Vniuersitie, or if they be yet say that all common Bakers whatsoeuer and without exception ought to grind at the said Mills, and that the defendants are such and vse to sell bread to all manner of persons as well of Towne and country as of the Vniuersitie.

Denie alsoe that the defendants or any other bakers for the Vniuersitie or Colledges haue vsed without any interruption to grind from the Castle Milles otherwise then as they haue done diuerse times by force and with stronge hand, soe as without breach of peace noe seisure could be made of their meale.

PROOFES EX PARTE QUERENTIUM.

Holliwell is a Mannor pertaineinge to Merton Colledge, containinge a whole parishe or Hamblett, the Colledge hathe a Mill their whereunto all the Tennants of this Mannor are tied to doe suite by grindinge their corne at that Mill, they may not grind from thence either at the Towne Mills or elsewhere. Also there are diuerse Townes nere adioininge which grinde at Holliwell, By like equitie and hopeth by lawe alsoe since all the houses in the Towne, or the most part therof are holden of the Mayor, Bayliffes and Comminaltie in Burgage they may challenge suite of all Burgagers at the Mill, though they had no especiall nor extraordinary prescription, yet their challenge is only to the common Bakers, all which dwell in Burgages.

The fee farme of the Citty was 60$^{li}$. wherof graunted to the Hospitall of Lepers at St. Bartholomewes 20$^{li}$ and after 5$^{li}$, was abaited by iudgement in the Exchequer 26 Edward III, because of the assise of bread and beere by the kinge graunted and by the Towne relinquished to the Vniuersitie. There is still paid into the Exchequer for the ferme 35$^{li}$ yerely besides the said deduccions and the 20$^{li}$ paid to St. Bartholmewes.

The profits of the Mills are the cheife meanes the Complainants haue to raise the said fee farme and without the benefitt therof they are not able to pay the same: William Leuins, John Holloway, Thomas Wood, George Tredwell, soe thinketh.

In the booke of Domesday it appeareth the profitts of the Mills be a third part in value thus Oxoñ firma 20$^{li}$ & 10$^{li}$ adiuncto molendino.

An Inqusition taken at Oxon before Hussey one of the Barons of the Exchequer setteth downe the profitts of the Mills in the first place as the principall thinge wherin the fee farme doth consist.

That the Castle Mills are able and sufficient to grind the Corne of all common Bakers in Oxford: William Levins, William Fenton, John Holloway, George Tredwell, sheweth the reason of erectinge the third Mill viz. to ease vnseasonable night grinding; John Willmott, Peter Misson, soe thinketh.

Proofes by ancient Court Rolls wherby it doth appere that there is a Leete or Mill Court belonginge to these Mills.

That all common Bakers owe suite to the court of the Mills and were amerced for default of appearance.

Priuiledged men being coppyholders of Mannors therabout may as well challenge to be free from suite of Court and the seruices to be done for their Lands as from this court and seruices pertaining to their trades.

That they may grind away by Licence payinge a grist penny when they could not haue their Corne ground their and when the Milles wanted repayre: Molauit extra et non soluit Grist penny Ideo in misericordia.

That their grist and meale ground elsewhere were forfeited and vsed to be attached in case they had noe such Licence.

That there were men of ancient time sworne to make attachment of meale ground from those Mills: Simon Barbator so sworne presenteth an attachment by him made.

That they vsed to examine such as ground their corne away, howe much they had soe ground away, and therevpon they satisfied for the toll.

That such as ground away whose meale was not attached were amerced.

That if the Bakers suffered any losse they were to be satisfied by the Owners or Fermors of the Mills and that the same is still vsed in like case *.

Proofes thereof by Wittnesses.

William Levins, John Hollway, Martin Caue (He being Miller hath vsed to make recompence), Thomas Collins, George Tredwell.

Thomas Collins hath bene recompenced; George Tredwell hath bene recompenced.

That this Leete or Mill Court hath bene vsed to be kept in memory: William Levins, John Hollway, Tho. Collins, Peter Misson, George Tredwell.

Vide Composition made 27 Feb: 33 Hen. 6 by mediation of George Neuell Chancellor of the Vniuersitie of Oxoñ and the Vniuersitie seale is put therunto.

* These statements are supported by copious references to the City Court Rolls.

That all common Bakers as well Priuiledged as others ought and haue vsed to grind at the Castle Mills vpon payne of forfeiture of their meale vnlesse they haue had licence vpon tender of a grist penny to grind away: William Levins, John Hollway, Thomas Collins, Thomas Wood, John Oven, Walter Ouen; they haue heard the custome to be soe, soe alsoe John Willmott and Peter Misson.

Order in Court of Requests.

Vide the order in the Court of requests 38 Hen. 8 at the suite of Lewes by which he was allowed in respect of falshood proued in Towne Millers to bringe other Millers to those Mills to grind his Corne payinge toll to the Bayliffs.

Vide also Indenture dated, 20 Martij Anno Eliz. 11° Lewes being a priuiledged man acknowledgeth the custome to bind him, and tooke licence for 14li Rent to grind elsewhere before that he had sued in the Court of Requests and was ordered to grind at the said Mills.

Vide the Writt for the Vniuersitie men that grind at the Mills noe vnder toll shalbe exacted.

That priuiledged persons not free of the Citty brought vp in trade haue not vsed till of late yeres to be common Bakers or Brewers but some Colledges haue had priuate Bakers within themselues: William Leuins, John Hollway, Martin Caue, Peter Misson, George Tredwell.

Vide the chartre of Hen. 2 wherby is graunted Burgensibus Oxoñ that none shall buy or sell victualls or other merchandize by retaile who is not of that Guild.

That priuiledged persons vsed to become free of the Towne before they vsed any trade of bakeing or brewing though they had married the Wiues of Bakers or Brewers: William Leuins, John Hollway.

A roll of the names of priuiledged persons who to the intent they might vse trade became free of the Citty.

Vide 15 Edw. 2. Rotul. 1. vpon presentment at the Mill Court that some did bake without licence (for out was knowne to the Jury) distresse was awarded against them to come in and shew what warrant or licence they had.

The Vniuersitie is for the liberall sciences and the Citty for Mecanicall, if both the sciences be Academicall the Vniuersitie swalloweth vp the City and the Kinge is defrauded therby of Subsidies and Fifteens from which priuiledged men are exempted.

A Chartre to the Vniuersitie expressinge what kind of tradesmen shall participate priuiledg with and by the Vniuersitie among which Bakers are none.

By which alsoe tradesmen participant of priuiledge are sett downe and Bakers are none of them.

That there be Mills within a Mile or little more of the Citty of Oxon to which Bakers may goe as well as to Holliwell.

That the defendants Pory and Hill are common Bakers and sell to all Cittizens and Country men aswell as to Vniuersitie men.

Vide Court Rolls of 4 Jacobi so presented by the Jury also we haue soe said in our Bill and they haue not denied.

That Millers of Holliwell and their seruants practize to drawe Bakers from the Castle Mills to themselues: John Hollway, John Stacy.

That there hath beene a third Mill erected lately nere to the 2 ancient Mills: William Levins, John Hollway. It is vnder the same roofe and 6 others depose the same.

This we confesse but conceiue not how it maketh against vs John Holloway sheweth the reason of erecting this third Mill and William Leuins ex parte defendentium.

Th' one Moitie of the 2 Castle Mills perteyned to the Abbott of Oseney and after to the Byshopp of Oxoñ and that Moitie made by the Byshop to Mr Owen: William Levins, John Holloway, Swithin Broadwater.

Respons. It is true, but aswell the Lease as the Reuersion of the Moitie haue bene purchased by the Citty and for that lease is drowned.

That the common Bakers and Freemen of the Citty doe often grind from the Castle Mills: George Tredwell, John Willmott.

Resp. The same John Willmott sheweth how his corne was fetched from forraine markets by forraine Millers and soe could not be descried to be seised.

That they haue not knowne any priuiledged persons not beinge free of the Citty to doe suite to the Mill Court or to haue bene compelled to recompence for the toll of their Corne elsewhere ground: William Leuins hath seene some there, John Hollway, John Wood, Thomas Smith, William Fenton.

Resp. None did vse Bakinge till of late but Freemen.

That vpon complaint made to the Lords of the Counsell against the officers of the Citty for seizinge the meale of a priuiledged person they were ordered to make restitution and to be punished: Thomas Smith.

Resp. There was not then any hearinge by the Counsell of that which could be shewed for maintenance of such seisure.

There is noe proofe that any of the defendants are Vniuersitie men which the plaintiffs by Replication deny and they haue not denied in their answer that they are common Bakers which the Bill affirmeth.

What was the cause that the seale of the Vniuersitie was put to the composition at the Request of the said Bakers but because the Bakers serued the Vniuersitie. At least there would have bene some exception of such as were priuiledged men, if any such thinge had bene meant.

A Verdict hath bene found against the pretence of the Citty.

The Verdict passed by default and against the proceedinge to triall there was an order in Court which vpon a false suggestion in the end of the Terme and order gotton therupon not entered till longe after the Terme was repealed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE documents which follow are of a miscellaneous character. The first is the copy of one among the S. Frideswide Charters, and gives in Norman French the boundaries of the Town and its jurisdiction, always excepting the franchise of Holywell manor, and its members, which are geographically included in the Town, but formed an exempt jurisdiction. The date is probably of the first half of the fifteenth century. The jurisdiction of the University was also comprised within the same limits, and was similarly exempt. Part at least of the lordship of the North Hundred was contained in the Town boundaries, but this was also probably under another authority than that of the Mayor and Bailiffs.

The second is a rental of the Town. It seems to be incomplete, or to contain those tenements mainly which were near the Town Wall. But the largest item is that derived from the cellar, shops, and chambers under the Guildhall, which was, I presume, on the same site as the present City Buildings are.

The third is a list of the tolls leviable on sales in the boundaries of the City and devoted towards the repair of the Wall, for this is the general meaning of murage.

The last two documents relate to buildings still standing in Oxford, viz. the tower of New College and that of Merton College Chapel. The former gives only a summary of the charges incurred. It is clear that the amount does not comprise the particulars of all the expense of building the tower, for the cost of raising thirty-three feet only of the structure is given. Part of the account is for building a portion of the wall. The straw for the tower and walls was probably purchased in order to protect new work from frost. The bell-tower, as will be seen, is covered with lead brought by land carriage from Winchester, and lead was probably part of the stores at Wolveshay Castle. I should conclude however that the total sum expended is what the tower cost.

The other is the detailed charges incurred for building the tower of Merton College Chapel, near half a century later. The account is reprinted from the third volume of my History of Agriculture and Prices, pp. 720–737.

[1] Probably the Jews of Oxford; there was no other great Jewish centre in the county.

To page 287, last line.

Berechiah, the author of the fables of the foxes, visited England about 1190 at least for a short time, and composed the fables on his return home, shortly after the massacre of the Jews in 1190. In his introductory verses he stigmatises the rich Jews in England with bitter expressions. Surely influential Jews would not have tolerated it had he remained in England after the publication of his work. He cannot therefore be identical with Benedictus the pointer, mentioned in the Charter of 1195 (See Jewish Quarterly Review, II, p. 522 sqq.). Berechiah knew Latin and the vernacular of the country where he was educated (Provence or Normandy), but little Arabic, if any, and could therefore not have helped Alfred the Englishman to translate fables from the Arabic into Latin. Not a word is mentioned in his introductory lines concerning any help he gave to individuals or to the University. He would not have failed to do it, if he had really assisted Christian scholars.

To page 316.

It appears from papers in Rawl. MS. D. 828, that there were in England in 1652 two Jews, named Abraham Bar Samuel and Eleazar Bar Ishai, the former of whom had been 'received by one in Oxford, and both had a stipend half-yearly thence.' The latter was baptized, and married to a Christian widow in December of that year, but he and his wife were both excommunicated by the anabaptist congregation, to which they professed to belong, in January 165$\frac{3}{4}$. (Communicated by my friend the Rev. W. D. Macray.)
